Dated this 3rd day of August 1877.

Wm. F. Littledale,
Assistant Registrar for Ireland.

REMARKS.

MUCH difficulty has been experienced in ascertaining the particulars required for the foregoing Return in consequence of the great variety of forms in which Societies draw up their Balance Sheets.

The Column headed "Total Receipts" is, in general, exclusive of the balance in bankers' hands at the beginning of the year, and of any sums deposited with bankers and withdrawn in the same year, but inclusive of the balance due to the bankers at the end of the year.

In many cases the Societies do not distinguish between "Subscriptions" and "Completed" shares. In such cases the total amounts have been inserted in the Column for Subscription Shares.

In the Column for "Balance of Unappropriated Profit," all reserve funds are, in general, included.

As the Statute, and the Form of Return, require the balance due on mortgage securities to be stated, exclusive of "prospective interest," all portions of the balance which consist of Premiums, &c., have been excluded where the amount could be ascertained, as will be seen by the marginal remarks in each case; but in many cases, the statement of accounts afforded no means of ascertaining the amount incorrectly credited as an asset, and in others the accounts do not show whether premiums or prospective interest have been included or not.

The Column for "Amount invested in other Securities" contains, in many cases, items which are not really investments, as for example—the balance of preliminary expenses spread over a number of years, &c., but as these are presumed to be authorised by the Rules, they have not been excluded.

BUILDING SOCIETIES.

"COPY of a LETTER from Her Majesty's Consul at Gothenberg, dated the 22nd day of February 1877, with TABLE of STATISTICS inclosed in such Letter."

British Consulate, Gothenburg,
22 February 1877.

Dear Sir,

I duly received your letter of January last, and beg to give you the following information in reply thereto:—

Capital punishment has not been abolished in Sweden, and the number of murders and other violent crimes within the jurisdiction of Gothenburg have of late diminished, as will be seen by the enclosed statistics for the last five years (Annex A.). As to the cause of the diminution, this is no doubt to be found in the better education of the lower classes. (A.) (B.)

The Gothenburg Licensing Company, or Bolag, had a good object in view when established; but the system, it appears, has proved a failure owing to the way it has been carried out, and is at present only a money-making concern, realising a large amount annually, which forms a considerable income to the town (Annex B.).

The drunkenness in Gothenburg is great, even among the better classes, and the lower orders consider the company's retail shops as their privileged abodes. These shops are situated in the most frequented situations, right in the face of the labourers and seamen, and I consider this a great encouragement and temptation to drinking.

The retail of so small a quantity as two bottles of spirit induces the labourers to buy this quantity, and drink it at their homes in the face of their families, which, of course, has most demoralising effects.

The system is adopted in most towns of Sweden; but the order in Gothenburg is no doubt better kept up than elsewhere by its large and well-disciplined force of police.

The distilling of spirituous liquors in this country is done on a very large scale, and the Government has an income of about 730,000 l. annually, which is no doubt the reason for allowing such immense production of an article which is the ruination of many, and a curse to the country.

The company's report for last year will not be published until next March, when I shall have the pleasure to transmit you further statistics for 1875 and 1876.

Captain Gane's letter is quite true; but he happened to visit one of the lowest shops (if not the very lowest) in the town, and the individuals he saw there were mostly coalheavers and stevedores' labourers, among which two classes of men the worst drunkards here are to be found.

I am, &c.

William Tallack, Esq. (signed) J. W. Duff.

(No. 69.)

Mr. Erskine to the Earl of Derby.

My Lord, Stockholm, 28 August 1876.

ON the receipt on the 19th instant of your Lordship's Despatch, No. 30, of the 9th, directing me to obtain, for a Committee of the House of Lords presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury, information as to the working and success of the Gothenburg scheme for regulating the sale of spirituous liquors, I lost no time in requesting Mr. Consul Duff to procure and transmit to me whatever information on the subject he thought likely to assist the Committee in their researches.

Mr. Duff has accordingly sent me the latest report of the Administration to the company for the retail of spirits at Gothenburg, which is herewith enclosed, as also a translation thereof by Mr. Jenner. Mr. Duff accompanies this paper by a memorandum embodying his own opinion of the system which he says is shared by many persons at Gothenburg, and which appears to be anything but favourable to its working.

I, however, likewise transmit to your Lordship the copy of a letter from Mr. Oscar Ekman, a member of the Municipal Council of Gothenburg, who, at Mr. Duff's suggestion, has been so obliging as to furnish me with a statement which is well worth the attention of the Committee of the House of Lords.

As your Lordship will perceive, Mr. Ekman recommends, as the best way of enlightening the Committee on this subject, that Mr. D. Carnegie, the well-known advocate of the system, who resides in London (No. 11, Hill-street, Berkeley-square) whilst Parliament is in Session, should be requested to give evidence before the above-mentioned Committee.

For all details in reference to the period preceding the year 1873, I beg to refer your Lordship to my Despatches and their Enclosures, No. 35, Commercial, of the 31st October 1873, and No. 3, Commercial, of the 10th of January 1874.

On applying to the persons best qualified to aid me in my inquiries here, I found that the Committee appointed by the municipality of Stockholm to examine this question had, towards the close of 1875, presented a report which was, upon the whole, so favourable to the adoption of the Gothenburg licensing system, that it was shortly afterwards determined by a large majority of the municipal council to try the experiment here also, which is, of course, the best proof that can be given of their belief in the efficacy of the scheme. Copies of that report are herewith enclosed, together with a translation published by Mr. Carnegie, from whom additional copies of the pamphlet in which it appeared could, if necessary, be procured. The chief objection seems to have been the heavy expense which would be entailed by the necessity of indemnifying the holders of life licenses; but that difficulty having been overcome and a company formed on the Gothenburg plan, the company will commence operations on the 1st of October 1877.

The

The gentlemen to whom, more particularly, I am indebted for the above information, are the two Messrs. Rubenson, one of them being a member of the Municipal Council of Stockholm, and the other Superintendent of the Stockholm Police. Neither of them is sanguine as to the effect of the Gothenburg scheme in so far as a decrease of drunkenness is concerned; and they both advocate its adoption here mainly on the ground that it will greatly facilitate the maintenance of order and decency in the public-houses and grog-shops, or, in the language of the Report of the Committee of which these gentlemen were prominent members, "that intemperance" *(at Gothenburg) "with all its bad consequences, has not diminished . . . . . but . . . . . so many advantages in other respects would, in our opinion, result from the adoption of the Gothenburg system, that we have no hesitation in recommending it."

*For "(at Gothenburg)" read "(at Stockholm)."

And lastly, I would observe that all the best informed, candid, and impartial men with whom I have conversed, whilst warmly approving the Gothenburg scheme, in some respects attribute the occasional apparent increase or decrease of drunkenness in that town chiefly to the prosperity or adversity of particular years.

I have, &c.

The Earl of Derby, &c. &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 1.

(Translation.)

REPORT to the Gothenburg Society for the Retail of Spirituous Liquors.—Gothenburg, 1 March 1876.

THE Administration of the Gothenburg Society for the retail of spirituous liquors, in accordance with the provisions of the 24th paragraph of the Regulations, begs to submit herewith, together with an analysis of its accounts, the reports concerning the management and position of the Society, for the year ended 1st October 1875.

Of the 61 retail licenses which the Society have still at their disposal, 21 have been made use of in the public-house and retail trade, properly so called, and 10 in clubs and eating-houses for the sale of brandy over the counter, whilst the remaining 26 have been left in abeyance. As to the 20 licenses for the retail of brandy, not to be drunk on the premises, 13, as was stated by the Administration at the last ordinary meeting, were transferred to a like number of wine merchants for the sale of finer spirits, and the remaining seven made use of for the retail trade carried on by the Society in different places.

In the course of the year the Society has sold 401,021 gallons of brandy, whereof 230,141 gallons to the retail trade (for consumption off the premises), also 35,912 gallons of finer spirits, and 3,042 gallons of various kinds of wine.

As from this amount has to be deducted for costs of management, repairs, State, and communal taxes, &c., &c., a sum of 11,651 l. 4 s. 4 d., there remains a net income of 33,722 l. 17 s. 9½ d., amounting, together with the 3,250 l. received from wine merchants for the 13 above-mentioned licenses, to a total sum of 36,972 l. 17 s. 9½ d., whereof 21,699 l. 6 s. 4½ d. actual duty, and 15,273 l. 11 s. 5 d. realised profits, which was paid into the Municipal Treasury for division at the settled rate between the town and the Economical Society of the province.

Of the aforesaid net income, it is calculated that about 18,870 l. 16 s. 1 d. are derived from public-houses (licensed to sell liquor to be drunk on the premises), and 14,852 l. 1 s. 8½ d. from the retail of liquor not to be drunk on the premises. On comparing these amounts with the quantities of spirits sold, it results that the Society (exclusively of the 3,250 l. derived from the 13 licenses sold to wine merchants) has paid into the town treasury a duty of 1 s. 10 d. for each gallon of liquor sold over the counter, and of 1 s. 3½ d. for each gallon to be drunk off the premises.

The

The last-mentioned dues during the years in which the Society alone has held the public-houses have stood at the following rates per gallon :—

	s.	d.
1866	–	$8\frac{1}{2}$
1867	–	$10\frac{3}{4}$
1868	–	$10\frac{1}{2}$
1869	1	$1\frac{1}{2}$
1870	1	–
1871	–	$11\frac{1}{2}$
1872	1	$1\frac{1}{2}$

In the absence of information, both as to the quantity of coarse spirits sold in this town during the year ended 1st October 1874, by the licensed retailers of brandy to be consumed off the premises, and as to the quantity of finer spirits sold in the same year by the licensed wine merchants, the Administration is not in a position to furnish data for an estimate of the consumption of spirits per head during that space of time.

The consumption does not appear to have decreased during the beforementioned year, and the limits of moderation were evidently over-stepped by the consumers, since the number of persons fined for drunkenness (concerning whom, however, the official returns are still wanting) rose to nearly 2,300 as against 2,234 for the previous year. As to the probable causes of the increase, the Administration beg to refer to the report they issued last year.

The Administration thinks it right to communicate, for purposes of comparison, the following Table, compiled from official sources :—

	POPULATION.		FINED FOR DRUNKENNESS.			Seized with Delirium Tremens.
Year.	Gothenburg.	Carl Johann's District.	Men.	Women.	Total.
1855	24,804	–	3,393	38	3,431	—
1856	25,628	7,796	2,635	23	2,658	—
1864	31,187	11,246	2,133	28	2,161	—
1865	34,065	11,685	2,040	30	2,070	118
1866	35,725	11,607	1,390	34	1,424	107
1867	36,087	11,811	1,354	21	1,375	82
1868	50,438	–	1,295	25	1,320	54
1869	52,526	–	1,412	33	1,445	75
1870	53,822	–	1,389	27	1,416	90
1871	55,110	–	1,527	4	1,531	86
1872	55,986	–	1,575	6	1,581	123

1874	58,807	–	2,229	5	2,234	101
1875	59,986	–	–	–	–	80

In accordance with the third paragraph of the Society's Regulations, the Administration have felt themselves bound to call in the amounts due on the shares subscribed for, and consequently, during the financial year, 205 shares have been paid up, constituting a sum of 5,694 l. 8 s. $10\frac{1}{2}$ d., which is the capital of the company.

The Administration feels it due to the company to bear witness to the zeal of the employés in the performance of their duties, and to call attention to the ready support afforded to their officials by the police for the maintenance of order in the public-houses.

Enclosure 2, in No. 1.

OPINION of an Adversary to the Gothenburg Licensing System for the Retail of Spirituous Liquors.

THE Gothenburg Licensing Company, which now holds the exclusive right of retailing spirituous liquors, had no doubt a good object in view when first established; but the system, it appears, has proved a failure, and is at present only a money-making concern for the good of the town, realising an enormous sum annually.

The drinking in Gothenburg is very great, and on the increase, I am sorry to say even among the better classes; and this no doubt has induced Mr. Baillie Lewis to state that Gothenburg is one of the most drunken towns in Europe. I cannot contradict him; during the 50 years and upwards that I have been in this place, I have travelled over most parts of the country as a sporting man; made three journeys to Norway, and as many to Denmark, at long intervals, and I must confess, that from what I have seen, this country exceeds the other two in drunkenness. The lower orders consider themselves now privileged to go to the company's retail shops and drink; these shops are in the most conspicuous situations and best localities, right in the way of the labourers and seamen, and they in consequence frequent them ever so many times throughout the day; I call this a great encouragement to drinking; this has come under my own observation, having two of these shops close to my offices, right and left, to use a sporting term.

The retail of two bottles of brandy by the company or "Bolag" is a great evil; the labourers club together and drink at their own homes in the presence of their families, encouraging their wives and children to partake.

The distillery of spirituous liquors in this country is very great, and on a large scale; the Government have an income of not less than 13 millions of kronor annually, and this is no doubt the principal reason for allowing such an immense production of an article which is the ruin of many, and the curse of the country.

Enclosure 3, in No. 1.

Mr. Ekman to Mr. Erskine.

Sir, Gothenburg, 26 August 1876.

CONSUL Duff has communicated to me the contents of your letter to him of the 18th instant, and at your desire, I have handed him a copy of the translation by Mr. Carnegie of the "Report of the Committee of the Municipality of Stockholm on the proposed adoption of the Gothenburg licensing system," and beg to refer you particularly to Mr. Carnegie's preface. If more copies are wanted, I will be happy to apply to Mr. Carnegie for the same.

As Consul Duff no doubt will furnish you with translations of the yearly reports of the Gothenburg "Utskänknings-Bolag," from the date of the full report sent you by Consul Engstrom at the end of 1873, there is little other information I can supply you with on that subject.

No doubt Consul Duff will also call your attention to the fact that since 1873, both the public-house licenses as well as those of the retailers of spirituous liquors, have been placed under the control of our "Utskänknings-Bolag."

It has greatly simplified the regulation of this business since the company have had the retailers' licenses also in their hands, giving the company in this way the power to regulate the prices of spirituous liquors in general (with the exception of quantities of not less than 100 kannor).

The company has further been enabled still more to diminish the hours during which purchases can be effected.

As regards the result of the company's operations, it cannot be said that they have been so satisfactory as one would have expected, looked at solely on information furnished by statistics; but here comes the question, what would have been the situation of matters here now had these improved regulations for the sale of spirits not been in force?

It must also be taken into consideration that of late years this country has been very prosperous, and the working classes, particularly in a town like Gothenburg, have earned largely increased wages, and consequently have been able to spend much more than formerly in satisfying their desire for spirituous liquors.

It is the general opinion here, that the best course to follow under present circumstances in encouraging the promotion of temperance, is to continue to follow out the course the community of Gothenburg has followed, by which it is hoped the desired results will be arrived at by degrees.

At first there were many opponents to the so-called "Gothenburg scheme," but of late there exists a general interest in the system, and much more faith in its success.

It has struck me—since this information is wanted as to the working and success of the "Gothenburg scheme," by a Committee appointed by the House of Lords on the subject of intemperance—no more satisfactory course for explaining the Gothenburg plan fully to the Committee could be adopted than by their summoning Mr. Carnegie, who resides in London during the sitting of Parliament, to give evidence before said Committee.

Mr. Carnegie having been so long resident in Sweden, and having taken such a great interest in this subject for several years, no one understands it better, and during a visit of some weeks here this summer, he devoted much time to investigating every detail of the working of this so-called "Gothenburg scheme" up to this date.

I only add that, as a resident here, and a member of the Gothenburg Municipal Council, my opinion is strengthened year by year as to the beneficial results conferred upon this community, and the working-classes in particular, by the operations of our "Utskänknings-Bolag."

I have, &c.

Mr. Erskine to the Earl of Derby.

My Lord, Stockholm, 21 November 1876.

WITH reference to your Lordship's Despatch, No. 30, of the 9th of August last, I deem it my duty to report, for the information of the Committee of the House of Lords for the protection of drunkenness, that a public meeting for the same purpose which lasted several days, has lately been held in this capital.

The meeting took place in the room used whilst in Session by the Chamber of Deputies; it was attended by the principal and best known advocates of temperance from all parts of the Kingdom; and more than usual interest was given to its proceedings, owing to the presence on one occasion of the King and the Crown Prince, who, for two hours and a half, listened attentively to the debates, and who were from time to time personally addressed by the speakers.

One of the questions discussed was, "What are the best means of promoting an earnest expression of public opinion against the sale of spirits and the vice of drunkenness in Sweden?"

After a lengthy but scarcely practical discussion, in the course of which one of the speakers apostrophised the King in doggrel, committees were elected to further the views of the meeting both at Stockholm and elsewhere; petitions to the King and to the Diet, embodying a series of resolutions, which are neither novel, nor, I fear, feasible, were adopted by the meeting.

The principal measures suggested are,—

That dealers in the country may be deprived altogether of the right to retail spirits.

That communes shall be entitled to grant or refuse all licenses to sell wine or beer, and that the Government representative shall not have power to interfere except with a view to prevent the commune from granting licenses.

That all bailiffs may be urged to do their utmost to prevent the adulteration of wine.

That heavier penalties be enacted for the punishment of breaches of the law against the sale of distilled liquors.

That in towns the right of municipalities to grant licenses shall be subject to the control of the Government authority.

That the price of all spirituous liquors shall be raised as much as may be possible.

That a heavy duty be imposed upon all breweries.

That all duties on spirits shall be levied on account of the State.

That the production of brandy shall be reduced.

That a heavy duty be imposed on foreign spirits.

And, finally, that all retail spirit shops be closed between 5 p.m. on Saturday, and noon on Monday.

These recommendations, I submit, do not imply much hope of amelioration from the approaching enforcement of the so-called "Gothenburg" licensing system in this capital.

I may take this opportunity of correcting an error which has been attributed by the "Times" of the 17th instant, to Mr. Chamberlain, M.P., in a speech which he recently delivered at Birmingham, viz., that "In Sweden the sale of spirits was nearly everywhere prohibited, but that did not prevent men getting drunk;" the fact being that I am quite unaware of any such general prohibition, as may be gathered, moreover, from the series of restrictions proposed at the meeting of which I have just given your Lordship a slight sketch.

My Lord, Stockholm, 4 December 1876.

With reference to your Lordship's Despatch, No. 30, of the 9th of August last, I have the honour to inclose herewith a summary of an article which has appeared in the leading Gothenburg paper, showing in a clear light the manner in which the local licensing system is regarded on the spot, and furnishing a list of the towns in Sweden which have adopted either the same or some similar system for controlling the sale of spirituous liquors.

Enclosure in No. 3.

Summary of Article on "The Temperance Question." From the "Gothenburg Handels Tidning."

The results of intemperance are so appalling and productive of such wide-spread evil, that even those who are most averse to any encroachments upon individual rights are willing to submit to legislative measures directed against the unlimited sale of intoxicating liquors.

In Sweden such measures have become part of the customs of the country, and the communes have now for many years exercised a certain control over the sale of spirits, such as restricting the number of public-houses, &c.

The Gothenburg system furnishes a fair sample of the measures adopted in this country. Under its operation not only is the retailer deprived of all share in the profits derived from the sale of spirits, but the company which furnishes the capital is also bound to make over the whole of the net returns for the benefit of the municipality and the provincial government.

Since the date of its introduction, this system has made such progress in the estimation estimation of the country, that it has even been adopted in the capital (where the difficulties in its way, including the redemption of ancient rights, are specially great), and will come into operation from the 1st of October 1877. It will astonish most people to learn that the so-called Gothenburg system has now been accepted by all Swedish towns whose population exceeds 5,000, with a single exception, viz., Lund.

Thanks to the co-operation of the large mercantile firm of Carnegie and Company, it has been possible to obtain the requisite information from no less than 40 towns. It has been ascertained that 46 towns in all: 27 with upwards of 5,000 inhabitants, and 19 less populous ones, have adopted a system similar to that of Gothenburg, viz., the retail of spirits carried on by a company deriving no private benefit from it.

The following are the names of the towns above referred to; there are probably others concerning which no information is as yet forthcoming, and it may fairly be said that the Gothenburg licensing system has been generally adopted in the town districts of Sweden:

Stockholm, Gothenburg, Malmö, Norrköping, Gefle, Karlskröna, Jönköping, Upsala, Orebro, Kalmar, Helsingborg, Christianstad, Landskrona, Linköping, Sundsvall, Halmstad, Falun, Ystad, Carlstad, Wisby, Carlshamn, Söderhamnttddevalla, Westerås, Eskilstuna Westervik, and Venersborg (all towns with 5,000 or more inhabitants), and Hernösand, Oscarshamn, Lidköping, Vexiö Christinehamn, Borås, Skara Sköfde, Eksjö, Filipstad, Mariestad, Alingsås, Engelholm, Åmål, Sölvesborg, Askersund, Marstrand Hjo, and Grenna.

(Commercial, No. 16.)

Mr. Erskine to the Earl of Derby.

My Lord, Stockholm, 13 March 1877.

I CALLED yesterday upon Mr. Rubenson to inquire whether the additional information promised in my Despatch to your Lordship, No. 13, Commercial, of the 22nd ultimo, upon the subject of the working of the Gothenburg licensing system, was yet ready, but I found, to my regret, that, although he had received from the company the requisite returns, he would not be able for a few days more to put them into the shape he deemed essential to the due understanding of the figures which accompanied my aforesaid Despatch.

I again pointed out to Mr. Rubenson that nearly five times more spirits were retailed by the Gothenburg Company in 1875 than in 1866; but he would not admit that these figures were any criterion of the aggregate quantity of spirits consumed at Gothenburg, but only of the quantity sold by the company; and it remains to be seen what quantity was sold by shops at one time licensed to retail liquor, but whose licenses have been gradually dropping in, and are now being worked by the company.

But since I last addressed your Lordship on this subject, the Diet has passed an address to the King, praying that his Majesty will direct his Government to carry out a searching inquiry into the existing regulations as to the production and sale of spirits, with a view to the adoption of further legislative measures against drunkenness at the next meeting of the Diet a year hence.

The "Aftonblad," in commenting on the address, is obliged to own that the committee which proposed it must have entertained but slight hopes of any real effects from its proposal, as it speaks of "at least an attempt being made to solve this problem by fully competent persons;" as if opinions in the Diet were too much divided as to the nature of remedial measures for the Diet to deal with the question itself.

The English advocates of the Gothenburg licensing system may well feel disheartened when they see the Swedish Diet imploring the King's interference to devise remedial measures against intoxication, instead of simply looking on with satisfaction while the Gothenburg system gradually delivers the country from the fearful evil which is undermining it. The system has, as it is said, been adopted almost universally in the larger towns of Sweden, and yet, in the debates which have just taken place in the Diet, I do not perceive the least allusion to this circumstance, or to the alleged diminution of drunkenness, which would surely have been mentioned if there were any foundation for the statement.

My own impression is, that the municipal bodies generally are favourable to the Gothenburg plan, irrespective of its supposed tendency to promote temperance, because they argue that, since people will drink, it is better that the town should profit by their intemperance than the keepers of spirit shops.

The motion for an address to the King was adopted by the Upper Chamber without any division; whilst in the Lower Chamber there were 123 votes for and 43 against the address.

— No. 1. —

REPORT of the COMMITTEE of the MUNICIPALITY of Stockholm.

IT cannot be denied that the immoderate consumption of intoxicating liquors has a most injurious effect on public order, safety, and morality, and it must therefore be the interest of the community to endeavour to restrain the use of such beverages within the bounds of moderation; with that view, the laws, while recognising free trade as a general principle, have made an exception in the case of spirituous liquors, increasing the price by imposing duties on the manufacture and sale, regulating the trade in "bränvin,"* as regards place, time, and manner of conducting it, and enabling the number of persons engaged in the trade to be limited according to circumstances.

All the above measures have been in operation in Stockholm, and the number of dealers in bränvin has from time to time been so much diminished, that from a maximum of about 1,200 in 1793, they were reduced to about 700 in 1847, to about 500 in 1850, and there are now only 280 licensed to sell for consumption on the premises, and 30 retail shops for consumption off the premises, the latter in quantities not less than half-a-kan (= three-tenths of a gallon). The question is, have these measures attained, or at least brought us nearer to, the attainment of the desired object?

In answer to the first part of the question the Committee need only refer to what daily meets the eye; so long as it is not uncommon to see in public places many intoxicated persons, not only in the evening and at night, but also in the middle of the day, and even during Divine service; so long as this disgusting sight meets us in certain parts of Stockholm to the frightful extent that one cannot pass through those streets in the evening without seeing people more or less intoxicated; so long as we hear the employers of labour complaining that their workmen spend hours and days in the public-house instead of the work-shop; so long as the poorhouses are filled to a great extent by those whom bränvin has ruined morally and physically; so long as the administrators of the law and the police bear witness that the greater number of crimes and offences, at least those against the person and public order, are the consequences, directly or indirectly, of the immoderate use of intoxicating liquor; and worst of all, so long as children and persons under age are seen to become the victims of the same vice, it is impossible to deny that we are far from having reached the limits of temperance.

It remains to be considered whether, although the state of things is far from satisfactory, any improvement has been gained.

To judge of this, a statistical comparison is necessary, which, to be accurate, ought to include all cases within a given period in which "bränvin" has produced crime, disease, want, immorality, and misery. Statistics, however, cannot furnish furnish us with direct information of all such cases, but the number of arrests for drunkenness in Stockholm in proportion to population, may be considered as tolerably trustworthy evidence, subject to the following observations : —

The figures of such statistics are far from including all cases of intoxication. We must remember that arrests are not allowed except of persons found drunk in the streets and public places; consequently, they do not include those remaining within doors while drunk. This, however, is of little consequence, as all those acquainted with Stockholm must agree with us that the cases of those who become intoxicated at home and remain there until they are sober, are, comparatively, so exceedingly few, that they may be altogether left out of the account; but neither are all cases of drunkenness in public included, for the law does not permit the police to interfere unless intoxication is made evident by language and action, which is by no means always the case, and many must, of course, altogether escape the observation of the police. Although the numbers in those statistics show only a minimum of the actual amount of drunkenness, they yet afford a reliable comparative measure of increase or decrease, especially within a period embracing a sufficient number of years during which the action of the police has either been the same, or has been changed to an extent the influence of which can be estimated. The last 24 years seem to us such a period suitable for comparison. During that time the laws regarding drunkenness have remained unchanged, and the number of the police has been about the same, only in one respect has any change occurred, viz., at the re-organisation of the police in 1865, before which all those committing smaller offences, including drunkenness, known to the police, were summoned before the magistrates, partly owing to the less regard for considerate treatment then demanded from the police, partly because the policeman who made the charge received a portion of the fine exacted. Since 1865 that practice has been discontinued, and it has been a rule that such minor offences shall not be brought before the magistrates unless previous warnings have been disregarded; and as regards drunkenness, the offender is not arrested unless he is helplessly drunk, or offensive to any one, or creates considerable annoyance in other ways. In the opinion of members of the police force, who have served during both periods, if the same liberal rule now existing had been observed during the former period, the number of cases punished for drunkenness each year would have been less by one-half than those in the official tables. In order to obtain a fair comparison, we therefore consider it right to reduce the numbers in each year from 1851 to 1864, but to be safe we have only deducted one-fourth.

In

In this table one cannot discover any constant increase or decrease, but it is clear to us that the fluctuations in the amount of drunkenness depend, in part at least, on the varying degrees of prosperity of the population, as evidence of which we refer to the column showing the proportion of drunkenness to the population compared to the average income of each individual for the last 10 years.

As the increase of drunkenness caused by favourable harvests and active trade may be considered as counterbalanced by the decrease caused by seasons of scarcity and diminished demand for labour, we must try to discover how far such increase or decrease is independent of times and seasons. We find, then, partly from the column of average income, partly from the evidence of experienced persons, that the years from 1851 to 1874 may be classified as follows:—

Good.	Average.		Bad.
1854	1851	1863	1853
1855	1852	1864	1859
1856	1853	1865	1868
1873	1857	1866	1869
1874	1860	1867	1870
	1861	1871

If we divide the 24 years into two equal periods, we find in 1851–62, 3 good, 7 average, 2 bad years; and in 1863–74, 2 good, 7 average, 3 bad years; so that the two periods may be considered about equal in this respect, but the average of drunkenness in the first period is one case to 70·15 of the population, against one in 66·60 in the second. This calculation is certainly only approximative, but it shows, at least, that intemperance, with all its bad consequences, has not diminished. Disheartening as this is, it is still more lamentable when we consider how much has been done for a long time by education, savings banks, and increased opportunities for innocent recreations, &c., which are the best means for raising the morality and temperance of the population.

As we have shown that the restrictions on the liquor traffic hitherto in force in Stockholm are far from having attained their object, and it cannot reasonably be concluded that the existence of the restrictions has occasioned the unfavourable result, or that to remove or relax them in some degree would lead to any improvement, it follows that we must either increase the same restrictions, viz., by raising the price of bränvin by increased duties, reducing the number of licenses, with stricter police rules, or apply the other remedy which the law offers us. Against the former alternative it may be reasonably objected that if you carry these restrictive measures too far, we thereby risk unduly burdening not only those for whom they were intended, but also the great majority of moderate consumers, and thus call forth general discontent and opposition, and considering how far such restrictions are already carried in Stockholm, we must maintain that the limits imposed by the above considerations have very nearly been reached.

It remains, then, only to consider what would be gained by the adoption of the only other corrective allowed by the law, hitherto untried in Stockholm, viz., the transfer of the whole sale of bränvin to a company, and with that view to study the results of that system in Gothenburg, the only town comparable to Stockholm in importance, where it has been in operation for a series of years.

We therefore refer to the following Table, showing the proportion of cases of drunkenness to the population of Gothenburg :—

Note.—The above population is from the Poll Tax Office Returns, which are several thousands below the real numbers. The Stats' Kalendar states the population of Gothenburg, according to the Government Statistical Office, at 63,748, at the end of 1875, and the summer population cannot be less than 66,000. Of the 2,234 commitments in 1874, nearly one-third (724) were of persons not belonging to the town population.—D. C.

These figures show two distinctly marked periods of improvement, one beginning in 1861, the other in 1866.

According to information from the Gothenburg Police Office, the first reduction was entirely owing to the same cause to which the like reduction in Stockholm in 1865 is attributed, viz., the different principle on which the police enforced the laws against drunkenness; but the second period of improvement, that of 1866, is not assignable to any such change, and as no other reason for it can be given than that the company began operations on the 1st of October 1865, to it must fairly be adjudged the merit of the reformation thus effected. That this improvement is not of a temporary but of a permanent character, is evident from a comparison of the years 1851–65 with those of 1866–74, remembering that the latter period includes years of great prosperity, others again of adversity. 1874 certainly shows a less favourable result than the other years of the second period, but it is still, notwithstanding the exceptional prosperity of that year, not much inferior to 1862, the best year of the former period.

The results obtained in Gothenburg appear to us by no means surprising, but most natural. It is clear that as the consumption of bränvin is dependent on the desire for stimulants and the power of satisfying that desire, and also the desire of gain on the part of the seller, the consumption must decrease in proportion as one of these influences ceases to operate, and as the law does not allow such a monopoly to a company unless the whole of the profits are devoted to public purposes without gain to any individual, we cannot but believe believe that such a company in Stockholm would cause a diminished consumption of spirits, as it has done in Gothenburg. But if, contrary to all probability, such should not be the case, so many advantages in other respects would, in our opinion, result from the adoption of the Gothenburg system, that we have no hesitation in recommending it. What are these advantages?

In such a company the managers of the houses, where spirits are sold, derive no profit from their sale, and have no interest in promoting it, therefore it may be considered certain that they will not disregard the rules of the company not to sell spirits to those under age, to those who have already drunk to excess, or to those who seem to wish to make the public-house their continual resort. It is clear that, as the managers will derive all the profit they can from the sale of food, malt liquors, &c., and none from the sale of spirits, they will do all they can to promote the former, and thus the object of changing the public-houses and dram shops into eating-houses will be promoted.

Nothing can have greater influence in counteracting the injurious effects of public-houses on morality and order, than if the management is in every respect satisfactory. The manager must therefore not only conduct it sufficiently well to escape legal liability, but in addition must show he possesses that firmness, zeal, and discretion which are required in his difficult position between the demands of the consumers on the one hand, and his duty to the community on the other. In the present state of the trade it cannot be expected that all license holders shall possess such qualities, still less subject themselves to pecuniary sacrifices to procure such managers, or dismiss them for faults which have escaped the notice of the police, although unfitting them for their position as regards the good of the community, as they would thereby risk diminishing the number of their customers and their profits. But we have every reason to expect that a company zealous for morality, temperance, and order, and in a position not to grudge the cost, will endeavour to obtain suitable managers, and immediately dismiss those who are careless and inattentive to these objects. Experience proves that the larger, cleaner, and lighter the public-house, the less attraction it is to the drunkard, and those who most originate immorality and disorder. It is readily conceded that late police regulations have done much good, but they cannot be applied to the numerous houses possessed by the holders of the old class of privileges for life, and not subject to the conditions of those licenses which are sold by auction; this would be remedied by a company who would procure the most suitable premises without regard to cost, and regulate their number and distribution only with regard to the good of the community.

In order to estimate the probable quantity of spirits which would be sold by such a company in Stockholm, it will be safest to take as a guide the sales of the Gothenburg Company for the year 1875, the first year in which it has held both the public-house and retail shop licenses.

[From the data thus obtained, the Committee arrive, by a detailed calculation, at a probable sale of 600,000 kans (345,000 gallons) drunk on the premises, and 700,000 kans = 402,500 gallons, at the retail shops; and the Report proceeds.]

We suppose that the company would transfer to private persons 30 public-house licenses for restaurateurs, the larger hotels, and clubs; and 10 to wine merchants, retaining only 20 retail shops, and 100 ordinary public-houses, which would make the whole number of licenses, including the 13 life privileges, 173 (or a reduction of 137 from the 310 licenses of all kinds now existing), and that the company, considering the competition to which it will be exposed, will not fix the price higher than 2 crowns per kan (= 3*s.* 10*d.* per gallon) in the retail shops for consumption off the premises; and 3 crowns (= 5*s.* 10*d.* per gallon) in public-houses (= $3\frac{1}{5}$ farthings per glass of 2 cubic inches) for consumption on the premises, prices hardly higher than those now paid in Stockholm, but lower by one-fifth than in the retail shops in Gothenburg.

As, therefore, the transfer of all the spirit licenses at the disposal of the municipality to a company would confer great benefits to the public, without any apparent disadvantages, the Committee have considered it their duty to endeavour to prepare the way for the realisation of this reform, which, for the last 10 years, has been regarded as a desirable object to be attained.

Of course it is taken for granted the transfer could only be to a company composed of individuals whose character and position are above all suspicion of deriving any pecuniary benefit for themselves, either direct or indirect. As is well known, the obstacle that has hitherto prevented this reform is the number of privileges of old date, which are independent of the municipality. Partly by purchase, partly by the deaths of the holders, the number has now been reduced to 146.

As freedom from competition is a principal condition for the realisation of all the benefits to be derived from a company, the Committee have entered into negociations with these license holders, 13 of whom have demanded unreasonable sums, or have altogether refused to part with their rights. It is no inconsiderable obstacle that so many should remain, but this difficulty cannot be of long continuance, owing to the advanced age of seven of them; six, therefore, would only remain as more permanent competitors of the company, which, considering the size of Stockholm, is not sufficient to delay the establishment of the company.

All the remaining 133 have signed contracts binding themselves to sell their rights, if demanded before 1st October 1876, for annuities to themselves (and in the case of burgher-rights to their widows), varying from 500 to 1,000 crowns (27*l.* 15*s.* to 111*l.*), amounting in the aggregate to 124,000 crowns (6,888*l.*), or an average of 933 crowns (51*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*) for each.

Whether the community ought to take upon itself the burden of such an annual payment in consideration of the moral benefits to be derived from it, every one can judge from all we have already stated. We now, therefore, proceed to consider the question from a purely financial point of view.

The income which the town derived from spirit licenses was, in 1874, 380,000 crowns, and is calculated for 1875—

But

But the net income of the company would be, as we have shown, at least 599,000 crowns, so the gain from the transfer to the company would not be less than 45,000 crowns (2,500*l.*), and that it would certainly increase, except perhaps for the first year, we are convinced, as the Gothenburg Company's profit for 1875 amounted to no less than 665,500 crowns (= 36,400*l.*).

[The Committee then give details of all the life licenses proposed to be purchased, and close their report by recommending the transfer to a company, to begin operations 1st October 1877.]

My Lord, Stockholm, 24 March 1877.

With reference to my Despatch, No. 13, Commercial, of the 22nd of February last, in which I stated that Mr. Rubenson had promised to supply me with the figures which, in his opinion, would account satisfactorily for the large apparent increase of drunkenness at Gothenburg, I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship herewith the translation of a letter from that gentleman, inclosing a tabular statement on this subject.

The chief arguments relied upon in these documents are :—

1. The great increase in the population of Gothenburg.

2. The gradual absorption of the whole liquor trade of the town by the company.

3. The increasing prosperity of the lower orders, which has led, as elsewhere, to increased consumption of all kinds, but especially of liquor.

4. In so far as concerns the great increase in the value of the liquor consumed, it must be remembered that the cost to the company of a kanna of spirits has risen steadily from 43 ö in 1866 to 77 öre per kanna in 1873. In 1874 it again fell to 70 öre.

Enclosure in No. 2.

(Translation.)

Sir,

I have had the honour to receive your letter of this date. I regret that the spirit question has for the present been thrown out in the English Parliament in consequence, as I have already pointed out to you, of the fallacious impression produced by the returns as to the state of things at Gothenburg.

I transmit to you herewith the statement I had promised you, which, unfortunately, I have been unable to complete until to-day. From this table you will perceive that the increased sale of spirits at Gothenburg can be explained, partially at least, by other causes than an increase of drunkenness. Moreover, it would not be fair to assume that an increased consumption of spirits at a period of greater prosperity implies a proof of increasing intemperance; for it is an admitted fact that consumption of all kinds, even the most legitimate, is greater at such times. At all events I cannot conceive that the tendency of the operation of the Gothenburg Company can be to promote drunkenness, as personal interest on the part of the retailer is there wanting, and the company is managed by prominent members of the community, to whom it is impossible to attribute a disposition to create a large communal income by fostering drunkenness. It may be that the Gothenburg system is powerless to diminish drunkenness, which is, however, somewhat different from fostering it, but that system must at all events lead to more order in the spirit shops, must deprive the retailers of any inducement to supply spirits to children or to give credit, and must be the cause of many other advantages, which are developed at greater length in the Report of the Committee, of which a copy is herewith annexed.

In so far as concerns more especially the address to the Government recently voted by the Diet, it cannot for a moment be supposed that the aforesaid address was occasioned by or dictated against the Gothenburg system, as the majority of the present Diet is composed of persons belonging to country districts where the Gothenburg system has not been introduced; but the address must have been adopted owing to the views entertained by a portion of the deputies as to the expediency of levying the whole of the spirit duty upon its fabrication, and not, as is now the case, of distributing the same between the fabrication and sale.

I remain, &c.

Stockholm, 23 March 1877. (signed) Semmy Rubenson.

Explanatory Remarks.

At first sight the following table might appear to give grounds for supposing that the action of the Gothenburg Company has not had the effect of decreasing drinking, but it must be borne in mind:

1st. That the increase in the quantity of spirits sold by the company is not only due to the growth of the population of Gothenburg itself, but also in a material degree to more constant intercourse with the adjoining districts. The best proof of this assertion lies in the fact that three-fifths of the quantity of liquor sold is retailed during the two days of the week when the country population come into market in the greatest numbers.

2ndly. That although the quantity of spirits sold by the private establishments competing with the company is not known, there is good reason to believe that their sale during the years 1866–74 was enormous, for not only was the number of those establishments such as to play a part in the consumption, but the interest of each seller compelled him to stimulate the traffic as much as possible, which is not the case with the company's establishments, as the income of the seller does not depend upon the amount sold. Moreover, it is clear that the traffic of the competing establishments was proportionally greater than that of the company, because the former sold at lower rates than the latter, and consequently encouraged the sale.

Mr. Erskine to the Earl of Derby.

My Lord, Stockholm, 16 April 1877.

WITH reference to my Despatch, No. 69, of 28th August 1876, upon the subject of the approaching introduction into this city of the so-called Gothenburg plan for regulating the sale of ardent spirits, I have now the honour to inclose a few short translated extracts from different Stockholm newspapers of old date, which show, I think plainly enough, that at the time the municipality decided upon taking this step its financial advantages were more apparent than its efficacy in diminishing drunkenness.

From these extracts your Lordship will also observe that the proposal was strongly opposed by many of the leading papers here, and I particularly call attention to the two last of these extracts describing the large profits derived by two of the towns which had adopted the system, care being taken in one instance to conciliate all classes of the community by a judicious distribution of money to the waterworks, the theatres, towards the heating of the church, to the churchyard, and to other public establishments.

I should explain that these extracts were selected by me from a collection of newspaper articles lent me by Mr. Rubenson, the director of the Stockholm police, whom I have always found most straightforward and candid; and I should wish to add that I have not selected any extracts from articles in favour of the scheme, in the first place because that side of the question has been thoroughly advocated already in England, and in the next because the favourable articles are almost avowedly inserted by interested parties.

Enclosure in No. 3.

(These Extracts were taken from a collection of articles published in the different Stockholm papers, lent to me by Mr. S. Rubenson 5th April 1877).

From a statement addressed to the "Aftonblad," without date:—"It is scarcely possible to read the committee's report on this question without coming to the conclusion that the committee set about its labours with the full intention of arriving, no matter at what cost, at a foregone conclusion." The article then proceeds to analyse the table quoted by the committee showing the amount of drunkenness at Gothenburg between the years 1851 and 1874, with the population of the town in each year, and shows that an improvement commenced in 1861, long before the Bolag was in operation, whereas, as soon as the Bolag had taken over the whole administration of the spirit traffic, the amount of drunkenness increased to an alarming extent, that is to say, from one case of drunkenness in 35 to one in 26.

In another article signed "A Law-abiding Citizen and a Hater of Monopolies" (inserted apparently in the "Aftonblad," but without date), there is an elaborate argument to show the economical fallacies of the proposed scheme, after which it says:—"But, moreover, can any one seriously maintain that drunkenness has diminished anywhere in consequence of a company undertaking the retail of spirits? We answer this with a most decided negative, and venture in this respect to cite Gothenburg, whose spirit company (however great its services may be) will surely not claim the diminution of drunkenness as one of them."

There is an article from the "Stockholm Dagblad" which shows also that that paper is a decided opponent of the introduction of the system here.

Stockholm, 28 March 1876?
(No clue to the paper from which this is an extract.)

Amongst the arguments against the proposed change, it says:—"No such a company, as far as we are aware, has yet been formed, as the spirit companies we know of have at least reserved to themselves a most respectable income."

* * * * * *

"The committee can surely not fancy that it can attain both the objects in view, viz., diminish drunkenness, and, with the help of drunkenness, raise a large income for the commune."

The

The next extract is taken apparently from an article in the "Dagen's Nyheter."

The whole article is violently opposed to the Gothenburg system, as advocated by the committee; one passage will suffice to show the tendency of the whole:—

"These figures show not only that at Gothenburg there is three times as much drunkenness as at Stockholm, but that the spirit company has had an effect directly the reverse of that contemplated. Merely in the five years, 1870–1874, the convictions for drunkenness have increased from one in 38 to one in 36, 35, 31 and 26 inhabitants.

"Thanks to the power of money and the influence of a coterie on the majority of the communal administration of this capital, it has now been settled that the spirit trade of Stockholm shall be granted to a company which, &c. * * *

"Several speakers showed that the experience of the town of Gothenburg, with regard to the operations of its spirit company, were by no means calculated to invite imitation, as drunkenness at Gothenburg had increased instead of diminishing; and convictions for drunkenness were far more numerous in proportion to the respective populations than here. 'No,' said Mr. Swanberg, 'to be frank, it must be owned that our object is to increase the income of the town, and not to diminish drunkenness.'"

Apparently from "Dagen's Nyheter":—

"It is well worthy of notice that the communal authorities have not accepted the merchant L. O. Smith's offer to take over the retail spirit traffic of the capital. Mr. Smith has declared himself prepared to pay to the town one and a-half million of crowns annually, or 800,000 crowns MORE than the income the commune now realises by the above-mentioned trade. The commune has given an unqualified refusal to Mr. Smith's offer."

It is not stated whence this is derived:—

"We know of a provincial town which, before the organization of the retail company, was in the receipt of an income derived from 12 spirit shops of 18,000 kronor (1,000 l.); but by means of the new company it raised at the end of the first year upwards of 45,000 kronor (2,500 l.), although the administration did everything in its power to limit the spirit trade, and reduced the number of licensed shops from 12 to 2, and the places for the sale of liquor not to be consumed on the premises."

Extracted from one of the Stockholm papers, apparently "Dagen's Nyheter," about the time that the town finally decided on the formation of a spirit company, viz., in April 1876:—"That communes occasionally derive pecuniary advantage from such an organization of its licensing system as has now been adopted is apparent by the results now before us of the operations of the Karlstadt Spirit Company, now several years old.

Mr. Erskine to the Earl of Derby.

(Commercial, No. 29.)

My Lord, Stockholm, 19 May 1877.

In reply to your Lordship's Despatch, "Commercial," No. 17, of the 10th instant, directing me to account for a discrepancy which exists between Mr. Consul Duff's figures and mine (as contained in a report enclosed in my Despatch, No. 69, of 18th August 1876), respecting the amount of spirits sold, under the Gothenburg licensing system, in the year ending 1st October 1875, I have the honour to state:—

That, in both instances, the number of Swedish kannor is the same, viz., 577,470, but that Mr. Duff has correctly converted these kannor into imperial gallons, at $1\frac{3}{4}$ kanna to the gallon, whereas my statement was unfortunately computed at the rate of kanna 1·44 to the gallon, that being the equivalent of the old gallon.

In reality, therefore, the two statements rest precisely on the same basis, and it is only to be regretted that inquiry should have been made of a person here who was not, apparently, aware that the old gallon was not the same as the imperial gallon.

The other discrepancy, pointed out by Sir H. Selwin Ibbetson in the House of Commons on the 10th instant, but which is not mentioned in your Lordship's Despatch, refers to the table enclosed in Mr. Rubenson's letter to me (Enclosure 1, in my Despatch, Commercial, No. 21, of 24th March 1877), where the gross amount of spirit sold by the Gothenburg Company in 1875 is given as 629,183 kannor. From this amount, as I learn from Mr. Duff, he (for some reason which is not explained) deducted 51,713 kannor of a superior kind of spirit, which would leave the quantity returned by him and by Mr. Rubenson the same.

On the other hand, in Mr. Rubenson's table above mentioned, 331,403 kannor have been deducted from the gross amount of 629,183 kannor (as is apparent from the heading of the column in question), because that quantity was sold by the retail dealers, who do not sell liquor over the counter. I may add, that this statement is fully explained in the Gothenburg report, of which a copy and translation were forwarded with my Despatch, No. 69, of last year. The fairness of this deduction seems to be recognised in Sir H. Selwin Ibbetson's aforementioned remarks.

In conclusion, your Lordship will not, I hope, object to my adverting briefly to the error I committed in my Despatch, No. 69, of last year, in saying that the report of the Stockholm Committee had actually admitted "that intemperance (at Gothenburg), with all its bad consequences, has not diminished,"—words which I have been unable to find in that report. But I venture to call your Lordship's attention to a table, published at page 11 of the same report, in which it is shown that in the year 1862 (that is before the adoption of the Gothenburg licensing system), there was only one case of drunkenness at Gothenburg per 28·22 head of the population, whilst in the year 1874 there was one case per 26·10 head of population, which amounts, I submit, to an actually admitted increase of drunkenness, although I am aware that the Gothenburg Bolag have attempted to account for this by arguments which, as far as I know, rest upon mere assumption.

Then, again, in a letter addressed to me on the 26th of last August by Mr. Ekman, a member of the Gothenburg Bolag, and one of its most zealous defenders (of which a copy was enclosed in my Despatch, No. 69), I find the following phrase:—"As regards the results of the Company's operations, it "cannot be said that they have been so satisfactory as one would have expected, "looked at solely on information furnished by statistics; but here comes in "the question, what would have been the situation of matters here now had "these improved regulations for the sale of spirits not been in force."

† These rates are for yarns not on spools. They are partially calculated on value at port of import.

Note.—The percentages in this Return have been calculated on the average Export prices of the various articles of British Produce or Manufacture, so far as could be ascertained at the duty. The rates stated for Yarns refer only to single and double Yarns undyed; and in the case of Cotton and Linen Yarns they have been calculated on three different prices, those at commencement of the present year. On certain articles it has been found difficult to obtain a fair average value, and in some cases it has not been possible to give an ad valorem rate of the lowest price relating to single unbleached Yarns. Some of the very finest Cotton Yarns are allowed to be imported into Belgium at exceptionally low rates, which are not here stated.

EXPLANATORY NOTE.

As the quantities of fresh beef imported into the United Kingdom are not separately stated in the Customs Returns, being included under the heading of "Beef, Fresh or Slightly Salted," the figures given in the annexed Tables do not represent the exact amount of fresh beef brought from America, and must not be taken as showing that any fresh beef is imported into this country from the Ports of Northern Europe. The Returns of the Imports of Fresh Mutton are shown under the heading of "Meat, Salted or Fresh, not otherwise enumerated."

The average prices are given according to the system adopted at each separate Port, and the wholesale prices cannot always be stated. The Board of Trade are indebted for the information to private individuals, and to Her Majesty's Consuls at the various Ports, who have kindly taken considerable trouble to supply the desired particulars.

The rates of freight for fresh meat from Ports of Northern Europe have not been ascertained, and it appears that as yet no amount of fresh beef or mutton is imported into this country from those Ports.

The average rate of freight for fresh meat brought from America is given in this Return.

No. 8.—Rates of Freight.

The rates of freight for the conveyance of fresh meat to Great Britain from Ports of the United States and Canada, are reckoned per ton measurement of the space occupied by the refrigerators containing the meat, and vary from 27*s.* 6*d.* to 30*s.* per ton, and 5 per cent. primage. This is equivalent to about ¾*d.* per lb. of meat.

No Returns have been received from Ports in Northern Europe as to rates of freight thence to the United Kingdom for fresh meat.

OYSTER CULTURE IN FRANCE.

RETURN to an Order of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 17 May 1877;—for,

COPY "of Translation of a REPORT made to the Minister of Marine in France, by M. G. Bouchon-Brandely, Secretary of the College of France, relative to OYSTER CULTURE on the SHORES of the CHANNEL and of the OCEAN, and published in the 'Journal Officiel de la Republique Française,' of 22nd day of January 1877."

Board of Trade, 17 May 1877. EDWARD STANHOPE.

(H. 896.)

Monsieur le Ministre, Paris, 29 December 1876.

YOU have done me the honour to entrust me with a mission for the purpose of ascertaining the state of ostriculture upon our Channel and Atlantic coasts.

I return from my mission with the strong conviction that this new industry, so essentially French, has, after some preliminary hesitation due to its very novelty, entered definitely on such a stage of development and progress that nothing it may be hoped can now cause it to decline.

The ever-growing wants of the consumer, further increased by facilities and readiness of transport, and the diffusion of wealth, have attracted attention during the last 30 years and more. Agriculture was first obliged to meet the greater part of these wants; but the incessant requirements of the public food market have not allowed any natural resource to be overlooked, and the rivers as well as the sea have been taxed to supply their quota.

In a few years our shores and watercourses were thoroughly exhausted, and the necessity for re-stocking the waters, and bringing the domain of fishery under the regular conditions of production, then became an economical question of the first order. Hence the origin and cause of two industries created in our days, viz.: pisciculture and ostriculture.

As early as 1872 and 1873, the Minister of Public Instruction entrusted me with a double mission, to study river pisciculture both in France and abroad. I am compelled to admit, and do so with regret, that, while with many of our neighbours the stocking of rivers and streams with fish is carried on with marked success; in France, the birthplace of pisciculture, where it had its first scientific laboratory, where the 600 watercourses which divide the soil offer a field of labour of not less than 700,000 hectares; in France, I say, pisciculture is not followed up with continuous or general attention. We can, however, at the present day call the attention of those nations who have surpassed us in the art of cultivating waters, to the progress which ostriculture has made on our shores.

The cultivation of oysters was, without doubt, practised in very ancient times. It is conducted now in nearly every locality where shellfish form more or less an article of subsistence, but it is not, as with us, subjected to industrial regulations.

I should state that the Department of Marine is the department which has given France her oyster industry, the credit of first efforts and perseverance in the enterprise and the honour of obtaining the results shown in my Report.

The idea of establishing special places for retaining and preserving the spat which the oysters emit at the moment of gestation, is comparatively recent. It originated with a high functionary in your department, who reduced the theory to practice.

In 1853, when M. Coste was visiting the oyster grounds of Lake Fusaro, and was noticing there some attempts at ostriculture of a timid and unmethodical character, M. de Bon, then Commissaire de la Marine, and chef du service at St. Servan, was occupying himself with the reconstruction of the old oyster-beds at the mouth of the Rance, and in the roads of St. Malo, by means of shells taken from the banks of the Bay of Cancale. He applied himself to the pursuit of these experiments with great perseverance. His efforts were crowned with success, and it is in his power to prove a fact, till then contested, and of the greatest importance as affecting the new science, namely, that the oyster is capable of reproducing itself on suitable banks (terrains emergents), and that it is possible to obtain harvests of spat.

On the strength of this discovery, M. de Bon himself formed at St. Servan an experimental park, literally a natural laboratory, in which he commenced a series of experiments on the means of attaching the spat. The attempts were a complete success, as M. Coste was able to prove and to announce in a report, dated 5th February 1858, and inserted in the "Moniteur" of the 28th of June following. M. de Bon invented some collecting apparatus, and soon by way of complete demonstration sent a platform, of his invention, covered with spat, to the Minister. This was accompanied by a detailed report.

I should here advert to the part taken by M. Coste, professor in the College of France, at the cradle of the new industry. Whilst surveying the coast under commission from the Emperor, who had directed him to make experiments in maritime pisciculture, the illustrious embryogenist visited St. Servan in the month of August 1857. There he found the culture of the mollusc inaugurated, and saw the decisive results which M. de Bon had obtained, both for the re-stocking of the natural banks, and for securing the spat. Here was the practical confirmation of his theories, and here, in many respects, the discovery of the means of execution of which he was in search. His lively imagination grasped with enthusiasm the discoveries of M. de Bon; to popularise it, he consecrated his high situation in the College of France, his reputation and experience as a scientific man, and the declared support of the head of the State.

Suitable means were placed at M. Coste's disposal; considerable sums were devoted to the task of re-stocking on a vast scale; and private industry sought to take part in the movement, and followed the impulse given by a higher quarter. It is known what bitter disappointments followed these first attempts, which appeared to compromise the whole future of the oyster industry. The Marine Department was, however, fully alive to the occasion. The conduct of the administrative duties was entrusted to a man who had set his heart on the success of the cause, and who was not discouraged. The strict observance of the decrees of 1853 respecting the coast fishery, may be considered as having largely contributed to the present prosperity. Of these decrees, the wisdom and the timely character of which has been shown by experience, which were intended to stop the pillage and total exhaustion of oyster layings, and which subjected their working to strict and sensible regulations, M. de Bon had laid the foundation by his reports and experimental operations.

The continuous application of these measures, the ever-constant attention, the encouragement and even example which the Marine Department never ceased to exhibit, ended in bringing about the re-stocking of the natural beds which seemed on the point of being destroyed, and in awakening a simultaneous spirit of progress in private oyster culture.

The latter, taught by its own experience, and the experiments carried on by the State, has improved and almost perfected its methods. After a rapid recovery it is now seen in a state of prosperity, which, while remunerative to the workers, is not wanting in profit or honour to the country at large. It must, however, not be forgotten that administrative supervision is now as useful to it for the continuance of success, as the care and encouragement of the State were necessary at first for preparing its path and directing its first steps.

In

In the course of this Report I shall have to bring forward contradictory facts; practically divergences in the application of methods occur at every step. These result from a variety of circumstances. Methods must not be inflexible, they should be capable of modification, if worth adopting at all, to suit different natural conditions. Those conditions vary necessarily with the locality, the climate, the nature of the soil, the character of the water, the direction and intensity of submarine currents, &c.

Some points in this extensive practical study require undoubtedly separate examination and study, but this Report, the object of which is merely to state the actual condition of ostriculture on our coast, is not the proper place for their enunciation or discussion. Whilst making from time to time certain special remarks, I shall, therefore, limit myself to reporting on my mission, in the order in which I have complied with it, and to describing the state of this industry at each place as I have found it.

Courseulles-sur-Mer.

In the vicinity of the natural banks of the Channel and of the oyster bed of Dives, at the mouth of the river Seulle, from which it takes its name, Courseulles, is one of the points on the coast of Normandy where the ostricultural industry is practised with success and profit.

The shellfish brought from this station has now for a long time enjoyed a well-earned reputation in our markets.

Courseulles is not, however, a breeding ground. The park owners (parqueurs), who have established ponds, own, at Saint Vaast-de-la-Hougue, preserves intended for the rearing and growth of oysters, and the ponds of Courseulles-sur-Mer only serve for fattening and preparing for transport. The oysters which are the object of cultivation come as a rule from the Channel banks, from which the fishermen bring them for delivery to the dealers. These oysters would not be so much valued by consumers if they were not previously submitted to a special training, which is the proper occupation of the parkowners at Courseulles. The object of this training is to impart the qualities upon which the reputation of these oysters is founded, viz., delicacy of taste, cleanness, and fitness for standing long journeys without loss of freshness.

The parks of Courseulles are dug out beyond the dune, or sandhill, and are kept in communication with the sea by the mouth of the Seulle. Arranged symmetrically along the banks of this watercourse, they are connected with it by channels, through which the fresh sea water flows in in every direction twice a fortnight, for several days consecutively.

Each park is provided with a floodgate, which serves to keep in the water or to empty the reservoir as the tide falls, or again to afford a passage for a fresh supply of water when it is desired to fill the basin. In this last case, the floodgate is not opened, except when the tide has risen above the level of the reservoirs. At this moment, in fact, the water is in its purest condition; prior to the rise the water contains in suspension mud accumulated in the bed of the river, and earthy matters which have been stirred up in the flow and reflow upon the shore.

The parks which are dug in an essentially clayey soil, occupy an area of from 15 to 16 hectares, a space which is capable of future extension. They measure between 80 and 100 mètres in length by 12 in breadth, and about 2 mètres in depth. The sides which are shelving form with the bottom an angle of 40° to 45°, and are covered by a layer of gravel from two to four centimètres in thickness.

In the middle of August the oysters of Saint Vaast-de-la-Hougue commence to be brought to Courseulles, as they are wanted, by boats specially kept for the purpose. Those oysters only are brought which comply with the regulation size, for the already advanced state of the season and the nature of the ground render it improbable that they will grow much in their new abode. On their leaving La Hougue, and on arriving at Courseulles, they are washed, sorted, and carefully freed from the mud and vegetation which may adhere to them, and from all parasitic bodies which alter the beauty and regularity of the shell and depreciate their value.

The method of training is very simple. In the first place the oysters are left to recover from the effects of their journey. Then, by means of a rake or even by hand, those meant for sending away earliest are spread on the slopes of the reservoirs; the others are thrown back to the bottom, upon the clay, until their turn comes for replacing the first.

The object is to accustom the mollusc to dispense with a fresh supply of water, and to retain as long as possible the quantity which it keeps in its shells. For this purpose it is allowed to stay in basins, morning and evening, for only half an hour or an hour during the first days. After some time, and by gradually increasing the time for keeping it out of water, it can at last be kept out all night.

Arrived at this stage, the oyster has actually learnt to keep its shells closed, and can be carried long distances without opening or losing its freshness. As regards fattening, no particular care is taken; that process takes place naturally at a certain time; and further, the parkowners attribute to the mixture of the fresh water of the Seulle with the sea the peculiar readiness to fatten which the oyster shows here more than elsewhere.

During summer and early autumn the withdrawal of the oyster from the water must end a little before sunrise, and be renewed in the evening, after the heat of the day has passed. At this season, also, the handling must be renewed more frequently, if the oyster is to be prevented from getting milky, which makes it unfit for consumption.

In winter, on the contrary, it is not so necessary to subject the oyster to this régime of privation, and frequent changes of position are less indispensable. The temperature being colder, evaporation is less, and the mollusc has not to take in water so often. But if the winter is severe, and the cold threatens to continue, the deposits of oysters are made in the direction of La Hougue, which is less exposed to frost. Courseulles supplies annually 20 to 30 millions of oysters for consumption; they are sold by classes according to size; as "large," "marketable," "fine and small middles," and finally, "pearls." The price varies much, and depends on the success of dredging.

Grand Camp.

Grand Camp is, as a station, not less favourable for rearing the oyster than the neighbouring one at Courseulles. But the sea, which is frequently very rough and beats on the shore, renders the establishment of parks impossible under ordinary conditions. To overcome the difficulties caused by the situation, artificial means were found necessary. Messrs. François André and Febvre have attained the following objects:

Without giving a separate account of the two establishments set up at Grand Camp in 1874 by Messrs. Febvre and André, it is enough to say that they have been organised on the same principle, and I shall describe more closely that of M. Febvre, on the model of which M. François André has also carried on his work.

Surrounded by high dikes, which shelter it both from wind and storm, and situated at a distance of one kilomètre from Grand Camp, beyond the dune or sandhill, and on low-lying ground, this establishment covers an acre of five hectares. It is divided into 32 parallel basins, of which the greater number are 45 mètres long and 15 broad, and 1 m. 5 deep. They are constructed of unmortared stone, and are separated by the pathways leading from one to another. Each basin is provided with a wherry, which the workmen can move about easily.

The water is received from the sea at the old Fort Samson, about 50 mètres from the higher parks. It can be changed at every tide, and is received into two receptacles, and carried towards the chief establishment by an underground duct, 1 m. 5 in breadth and depth.

The water is distributed by means of strong floodgates, which also keep in the water when the tide goes down. A feeding canal, running the length of the establishment, which it divides in two, carries the water in every direction. The reservoirs are supplied with sluice-taps for letting water in and out. As the parks have been formed on land having a slight incline, and as they intercommunicate, a current inside can, when wanted, be produced. I should add, that several little springs rise in the basin itself and modify the saline qualities of the sea water. The soil is essentially argillaceous.

Between Fort Samson and the establishment are the buildings where are carried carried on the various manipulations incident to oyster culture, such as separating dredged oysters from one another, sorting, packing, &c. Fourteen women find employment all the year round at this establishment.

It may be asked what is the object of these 32 basins; what are the methods employed by Messrs. Febvre and André for training in the first stage, rearing, fattening, and greening the oyster? The two semicircular reservoirs at Fort Samson, which first receive the sea water, are appropriated to the preservation of spat. One portion of one of these two receptacles is used for the experiments to which M. Febvre has applied himself on the artificial fattening of the oyster, according to methods practised by certain American rearers. These experiments have been without result.

The operations which precede the sending away the oysters, washing and purging, are carried on in an asphalte basin set apart for these purposes in the chief establishment.

In the other parks the oysters are placed in classes according to age and size.

All the spat dealt with at Grand Camp comes from Brittany. As soon as it arrives, in the month of April, the young oysters are stuck, to the number of 4,000 or 5,000, on metallic hurdles, one mètre long and 50 centimètres broad. The use of these hurdles economises the time devoted to cleaning the spat, in order to free it from the mud brought in with it from the sea; it is enough to take the apparatus by the two handles with which it is furnished, and to shake it gently in the water. After some months the growth is plainly visible, and the hurdles have to be taken away. But the basins at Grand Camp being too small to hold the quantities of oysters reared every year by M. Febvre, a part of them are sent to St. Vaast-de-la-Hougue, and the rest are shut up in boxes two mètres square, covered with wooden laths, wide enough apart to allow water to enter, and immersed in a park constructed far enough out in the sea, and yet near the establishment.

When the oysters have reached the saleable size, they are brought back in November to the shore parks, when they are spread on the ground, or on the hurdles, in order to fatten.

The greening takes place as winter comes on. Then the hurdles get lined with a sort of green moss, the appearance of which is the signal for that colouring of the oyster which takes place here, as well as at Marennes. The oysters coming from the parks of MM. Febvre and François André may be reckoned for quality and shape with the best. The shell, small, light, transparent, and well rounded, reminds one of the Ostend oyster, which it may also rival as to edible qualities. What above all distinguishes the oysters of Grand Camp is the similarity of taste which they have with the highly reputed and undoubtedly superior oysters of the bank of Guinehaut, a natural bed situated at the mouth of the Isigny river, which is unfortunately far from productive.

To give an idea of the importance of the Grand Camp establishments, I may say that M. Febvre is in a position to supply at this moment 3,000,000 of oysters for consumption.

Saint Vaast-de-la-Hougue.

From time immemorial the fishermen of St. Vaast-de-la-Hougue have added to their other employments the rearing of oysters. But with the exception of a few new park owners, mostly inscrits maritimes, who work parks conceded by the State, they are satisfied with keeping for a very short time the oysters, which, whether taken by the hand or with the dredge, are the result of the fishing operations of the greater part of the population of this district, who betake themselves to it during the time that fishing is allowed.

On the 1st September the sailors come to the natural banks to fish for oysters. Fishing on foot is only productive at spring tides. It is practised by women and children who pick up such oysters only as have been detached by the violence of the waves from their native beds.

The oyster concessions of St. Vaast-de-la-Hougue, established on a muddy-clay soil, comprise depôts or layings and parks. The first, to the number of 48 occupy an area of 46½ hectares, and extend along that part of the beach called La Couleige: they are reserved for young oysters which have to grow in order to be marketable. The second, set apart for the preservation of eatable oysters, are situated in La Toquaise, and are shielded for the most part from the sea by the little Isle of Tatihou. They number 137 on an area of 39½ hectares.

The depôts or layings are only uncovered at spring tides; they are bordered by ridges of unmortared stones from 15 to 25 centimètres high. The parks are enclosed with walls also of unmortared stones from 75 centimètres to one mètre high, and from two to three mètres thick. At the approach of winter, and after the small oysters from the depôts have been transferred to the parks for shelter from the severity of the cold, a layer of potters' earth mixed with straw is placed in the walls, in order that water may be kept in the receptacle at low tide. The covering of water by which the oysters are overlaid keeps them from contact with the outside cold and frosts.

The costs of management are shared by each riparian owner.

The depôts and parks are cleaned once or twice a year, it being necessary to clear away the mud deposited by the sea, and the vegetation which springs up.

The oysters with which the rearing succeeds best come from the Bay of Cancale or the bank of Dives. Nevertheless, the experiments tried upon Arcachon and Brittany oysters have resulted favourably.

The rearers of La Hougue consider that the parking of the oyster should not be for more than two years. The first year it grows from about three to four centimètres; in the second it grows less, it is true, but it thickens and fattens. The native oysters, that is those fished within a very short radius, can be kept longer.

The methods of rearing pursued at La Hougue consist chiefly in cleaning and frequently changing the places of the oysters, in order to prevent their being buried in the mud or covered by parasitic seaweeds, which attach themselves to the shells, prevent the oyster from opening, and finish by stifling and killing it.

In the parks these manipulations take place two or three times a month or even oftener, according to the quantity of earthy matters deposited by the sea and the abundance of marine plants. During the winter it is less necessary to do this frequently; for, independently of the difficulty which there is always in working at that season, the hair-weeds which are most prejudicial have disappeared.

The young oysters growing in the depôts are not subjected to any treatment during the six or seven months that they stay there. The depôt being situated pretty low in the sea, the water covering them is purer, and algæ are scarcer. Nothing more is done than to wash them on their being put into winter quarters and on bringing them out again.

I should repeat here an observation made by certain rearers at St. Vaast-de-la-Hougue, that certain parts of the grounds worked became unsuitable for keeping oysters and seemed exhausted. There are some persons who, to remedy this state of things, have taken the step of giving their parks rest for a year in order to leave these aquatic fields time to improve, and to some extent to recover. I should add that they have had reason to congratulate themselves on this resolve.

It is necessary now to enter into sundry details to discover the many causes which may have combined to produce this exhaustion. The two principal ones are the following:—1st. The overcrowding of too large a number of oysters in the same park; 2nd. The incessant rising of fœtid mud formed by vegetable matters in decomposition, which the water carries in every direction. In the first case the oysters receive but insufficient nourishment; insufficient, because if in a given quantity of water there is only nourishment for 1,000 oysters, 50,000 cannot find their food there, and thinness and sickness are the necessary consequences.

In the second case poisoning causes death; but I hasten to state that this condition of the parks at La Hougue has been much exaggerated, and affords no cause for alarm. I am, on the contrary, very happy to affirm that the importance of the oyster industry goes on increasing constantly. The industry is about to make new increased efforts. Many abandoned parks have been taken again, and are now prospering. It will be enough for me to say that 300 persons find occupation every day in the concessions of St. Vaast-de-la-Hougue, and that this number is at least doubled at every spring tide.

Granville.

It is on this part of the French coast washed by the Channel, and between St. Malo, Cancale, Granville, and Régneville, that our richest natural deposits lie. In the neighbourhood of Granville alone we count the banks of La Forraine, Haguet, Trou-à-Girou, Saint Marc, Bout-du-Roc, St. Germain, Géfosse, Sénéquet, La Cortaise, Le Ronquet, Le Pirou, 11 natural banks in all.

It would be difficult to estimate the number of inhabitants on this coast who get their living by the oyster fishery; it is considerable. Still it has sensibly diminished for some years, as the fishery is less productive than formerly.

With a view of competing with English fishermen in the working of the open sea, fishermen living near the Granville and Cancale banks were authorised to break the rule which restrained them from ever staying out at night with their boats. It resulted that under pretence of dredging concurrently with the English on the common grounds, they worked in preference upon the oyster-beds reserved in the territorial waters and ruined them.

Wise measures have been taken to prevent a recurrence of these depredations.

Thanks to assiduous watching; thanks to the power left to the Maritime Administration to forbid fishing at any given place during one or two years, if the necessity for such prohibition has been recognised by the Commissions charged with ascertaining the state of the oyster-beds; thanks, lastly, to the district where it is absolutely forbidden to fish, which the State has decided to reserve, and from which reproduction radiates upon all neighbouring places, the oyster-beds are now reviving.

Certainly this work of revival cannot be entirely accomplished in so short a time. In spite of the extraordinary fecundity which the oyster possesses, it is necessary that the places where the spat is about to fall should present the conditions indispensable for its development. Now these conditions are not always found on banks exhausted by reckless fishing. We must wait for them to be reconstituted and renewed.

The ostricultural industry, properly so called, is carried on at Granville in 85 parks of deposit, which serve only to shelter the oysters fished on the neighbouring banks, till the time when the rearers from Courseulles and La Hougue, who usually purchase them, come to take them away.

These parks are all bounded by a double fence, from 70 to 80 centimètres high; the space between the two fences is filled with a layer of potters' earth, mixed with straw, or with mud only. This arrangement is intended to prevent the oysters placed in the parks from being carried away and dispersed by the sea, and at the same time to keep in the water at low tide to shield them from the effects of heat and cold. I should add that the sea is so often rough at Granville, that though there are in the neighbourhood inexhaustible centres of reproduction, it would be very difficult to fix collecting apparatus on the shore.

Régneville.

Though at no great distance from Granville, the station of Régneville is very favourable to the rearing of the oyster.

It is to be remarked that the circumstances of position are different. Near the head of the angle formed by the coasts of Normandy and Brittany, there opens up an immense haven which begins at Point Agou and stretches along the beach where Régneville has been built. The rising sea covers it at every tide. The Sienne, a little river of fresh water, taking its rise at la Baleine, falls into this bay, and mingles its waters with the sea, the saltness of which it tempers, and gives it that quality so prized and sought for by ostriculturists which I have already noticed in speaking of Courseulles.

It is just below the mouth of the Sienne that the ostricultural establishment founded by Madame Sarah Félix, of which I am going to give a short description, is situated.

I shall pass by with slight remark some ancient parks unworked from the time that the fishermen have taken the product of their fishery elsewhere, as well as some still older depôts now abolished and formerly known by the name of the parks by the Passevin brook. These depots, carried on in the style of those at Courseulles, had no object but that of giving shelter for a longer or shorter time to oysters gathered by the fishermen of the place, who disposed of them to the owners of these ponds. The depots were fed by an underground canal communicating with the sea, and supplying water at high spring tides only.

Before Madame Sarah Félix established herself here, no serious attempt at rearing had been undertaken at Régneville.

The parks belonging to Madame Sarah Félix, dug out on calcareous soil, occupy on the shore an area of five hectares. A dike which cannot be submerged, with a height of six mètres, made of earth taken from the inner basins and strong rock work, protects them from the attacks of the sea. The side facing the open cannot be mined or worn away, being protected by great stones against which the sea breaks.

An open canal which starts from low-water mark and leads up to the establishment, introduces the water. On its arrival, the water is received and distributed through a strong floodgate worked by cranks, and of which the low level is several feet lower than dead low water. It was indispensable to adopt this arrangement in order to prevent any but perfectly pure water getting into the reservoirs at high tide. All along the haven there is a quantity of sand that the sea raises when sweeping the shore.

A principal feeding canal traverses the establishment and distributes fresh sea water to 24 basins, measuring about 3·5 mètres in depth, and capable of holding 2·5 mètres of water.

Each receptacle communicates with the canal by a small floodgate, for letting out and keeping in water.

A rather abundant spring, rising in the vicinity of the property itself, serves to temper the saltness of the water.

What have been the results obtained in the Régneville parks?

After various preliminary experiments had shown the possibility of practising the rearing and fattening of the oyster with success in the parks which she had organised, Madame Sarah Félix made, in 1865, attempts at reproduction from captive oysters.

Adult specimens taken from the banks of La Cortaise, which supply the finest and most esteemed products of this district, were placed in a receptacle where collecting apparatus made of boards and tiles had been arranged. At the usual season the oysters emitted spat, and the spat was on the point of adhering to the collectors. If the result was not quite a success, for it was perceived during the experiment that the basin was wanting in depth, and that the water in it was not changed often enough, it was at least very encouraging.

A large number of young oysters which had been successfully preserved, soon attained, even upon the collectors, a wonderfully quick growth.

Soon after, new experiments were made upon 100,000 oysters. Ostriculture was then fresh, and the preparation had not been discovered with which to line the collectors, in order to facilitate the detroquage or separation of the oysters attached to them. To remedy the difficulties which had been encountered, a paper, lined with a thin layer of cement, was applied to the tiles. It thereupon became easy to detach the young oyster from the place where it had stuck. In addition, a suitable means was provided for the regular feeding of the basin.

The success was complete. The collectors were covered with spat, the separation of which was easy; and the further development of the new generation, bred in the Régneville parks, was accomplished under the most favourable conditions.

During a considerable time the parks, which required expensive works and new means of carriage, were somewhat forsaken. In 1873 M. Vallé had placed there for rearing and fattening 83,000 young ones, coming from Vivier-sur-Mer, and of a size of about two to three centimètres. One year later 65,000 of these oysters were disposed of for consumption, when they had attained the size of from seven to eight centimètres.

Since this, Madame Sarah Félix has had improvements which she had decided on carried out, which allow of having a fresh supply of water in the establishment at each tide, which was not possible until the level of the floodgate had been been lowered, and the parks had been deepened. There is room to believe that these happy alterations will cause this fine establishment, the first of its kind, to satisfy the legitimate hopes that the first successes have given rise to.

I shall conclude as I began, by expressing again the opinion that the Régneville station offers all desirable conditions for becoming an important place for ostricultural industry, not only because of its situation, but also because it combines all natural elements of prosperity for the carrying on of this industry. The grounds which might be brought into cultivation are enormous, and their working would be easy and lucrative.

Cancale.

Among the most justly appreciated products of ostriculture the oysters of Cancale take one of the highest ranks. They are distinguished at once by their flavour, and the beautiful shape of their shell, and its depth. The fish is thick without being coarse. It keeps fresh several days, and retains for some time the sea-water which its shell contains. These qualities are due to the origin and the kind of oyster as much as to the methods of rearing.

The methods of training in use at Cancale are like those employed by the rearers of La Hougue.

The oyster-beds of the Bay of Mont St. Michel, from which these delicate oysters come, are the most fertile in the Channel. They comprise the banks of Corbière-ô-les-Chaudières, Le Bas-de-l'Eau, Le Vivier-ô-le-Mont, L'Orne-ô-le-Moulin, called La Raie, Saint-Georges, Le Beauveau-ô-le-Mont, and finally the unassigned part of the bank, which the State has constituted a reserve, and which serves as a demarcation between the beds of the districts of Cancale and Granville.

Cancale is not merely a place of deposit; the rearing of the oyster is also practised there from the time that it is gathered on the open banks, or gleaned upon the beach by fishermen, until the moment when it has acquired the properties which cause it to be sought for our tables.

The conceded grounds spread over an area of 172 hectares; they are distributed into 1,276 portions, and divided into parks and layings. The former are situated rather low in the sea, and their fences are covered every year with spat. The little oysters, whose size prevents their being offered for sale, are put here to grow. In the parks adult oysters are kept and fed. All the concessions are bounded by a double palisade, which saves them from the ravages that the strong current might make. There exist in the whole Bay of Mont St. Michel two elements of destruction, against which the park-owners must constantly struggle—wind and mud. The winds from the open, the violence of which is such that the oysters are often carried from one park to another, or dispersed in the channels, generally blow during the winter, and considerably multiply the daily cares which attach to the maintenance of the ponds. Mud and sand are increased by the roughness of the sea.

At each tide, when practicable, the rearers must visit their parks, and proceed with the cleaning, the necessity for which perpetually recurs. Four thousand persons are daily employed at this work.

The oysters stay little more than two or three years at Cancale, that period being enough for them to develop into a saleable size. The rearers have no interest in keeping them longer.

In addition to the oyster merchants, properly so called, who take advantage of the provisions of Article 338 of the Decree of the 4th July 1853 to obtain concessions by means of a ground-rent levied by the administration of the domains, many inscrits maritimes carry on the oyster industry on their own account.

Those least well off are contented to keep for one season the oysters that they have fished on the banks, and those that their families pick up on the beach.

Before the administration of marine had applied the protective measures which are the safeguard of our oyster beds, the fishery on foot became less and less productive. Now it is practised by caravans composed of 500 to 1,000 persons, both women and children, who find a sure means of existence by it.

I have still to say a word about the attempts undertaken under the auspices of the administration to collect, in spite of the state of the sea, the spat which every year escapes from the oyster beds.

The park which the administration has set apart for these experiments measures 40 mètres in length by as much in breadth. The side looking to the sea and the corresponding side are quite open in order that the waves bringing the embryos may circulate freely inside; the two other sides are defended by palisades. Tiles arranged in hives (ruches), fascines of birch tree, and schistous stones, have been employed as collectors The brood has adhered pretty freely, but in winter the sea, driven by the strength of the currents, has detached from the collectors a large portion of the young oysters, which had fastened on them. The object of the administration, which wished to prove that the spat was as abundant at Cancale as at Le Vivier, and that it was possible to collect it, has been attained; private enterprise will do the rest.

It is needless to say that the measures of surveillance taken by the marine for the preservation of our banks shelter at the same time the parks from the cupidity of marauders. Besides the ordinary police trained by the agents of the administration, seven guards paid from the funds of the treasury belonging to the layings, two general guards, to which the treasury of the community of fishers allows something, and four sworn guards nominated and paid by the marine, are employed upon this watch.

I should also mention that a syndical commission, composed of the commissaire of the inscription maritime as president, the mayor of Cancale, the inspector of fisheries, the syndic of the seafaring people, the treasurer of the community of fishermen, a park guard, and a guard of layings, fixes each year the rating to be paid by the concessionaries of the parks and layings, the sum of which goes to cover the common expenses of working, such as allowance to guards, maintenance of roads, channels, &c.

Finally, I have had the pleasure of proving that almost all the concessions are worked. Ten years ago half the parks had been abandoned.

Le Vivier-sur-Mer.

Founded under conditions analogous to those of Cancale, the parks of Le Vivier-sur-Mer date no further back than seven years. Before that time fishing was almost the only industry in which the population were engaged. The foreshore at Le Vivier is very like that at Cancale; there is the same muddy soil, which is, however, rather more calcareous; the sea is equally violent, and there are the same difficulties in resisting it; but the methods of working differ, and at Le Vivier-sur-Mer reproduction is the main object. Rearing on collectors is, however, successful there, and it would even seem that the coast in this locality is more favourable to the rapid growth of the mollusc than that at Cancale.

Before entering upon the details of the training of the oyster, I shall mention in a few words how ostriculture has been introduced into this locality. The attempts at reproduction made at various points on the coast had attracted the attention of some persons who undertook to collect the streams of spat which the oysters give off in the spring, and which until then were hopelessly lost through settling on muddy ground.

The first collectors placed on the shore of Le Vivier were owned by M. Barbet; they consisted of schistous stones, and fences placed in the main current.

This first attempt was tolerably successful. The following year M. Meury de Villers, having obtained from the Ministry of Marine, which wished to encourage these attempts, the concession of one hectare of land, organised parks and arranged in them cross-pieces of wood; schistous stones, inclined in the shape of a roof, of volume large enough to resist the current; and fences, which were not very close, of from 3 to 4 mètres in length and 0·6 mètres in height, completed the arrangement.

This year the harvest was abundant, but the cold and frosty seasons which followed, and the sea, under the influence of wintry storms, destroyed a part of the crop, and the frost added to the disaster.

Those

Those oysters alone were preserved which were fixed at the bottom of the schistous stones, and they furnished remarkable specimens in point of form, quality, and growth.

Many other persons saw, in this first attempt, a ground of hope, rather than discouragement. The sea, though often in a state of disturbance, is not always so, and frosts rarely coincide with the spring tides, by which alone the parks of Le Vivier are laid bare.

New concessions were sought and obtained, and the shore of Le Vivier was quickly covered with parks.

The sad winter of 1870-71 was still more destructive, but failed to stop the progress of the rising industry. The collectors retained so little spat thatmany park-owners abandoned their operations; but the following years brought abundant returns, and this ostricultural station of but yesterday's creation has a cheering prospect as a place for reproduction.

The parking of oysters is very difficult, if not impossible, at Le Vivier; and the oysters are left to grow on the collectors until the time of sale.

Fascines and schistous stones are the only collectors employed, but Mme. Sarah Félix has advantageously substituted for the old apparatus a new machine made of pieces of slate, which is generally immerged between 15th June and 15th July. The fascines must be often changed, for the sea quickly destroys them; barnacles (cravants), also, which abound on this part of the coast, cover them in spring and make them unfit for retaining the spat. These parasites are not the only enemies to be encountered; mussels, which are a far deadlier foe, come in such quantities upon the parks of Le Vivier that they form on the ground a layer of from 15 to 35 cèntimetres thick.

There is neither time to bury them, as is done at Ile d'Oléron, nor to gather them, though they are edible. The reason is that the parks of Le Vivier are situated very low in the sea, and as they are only uncovered at low tides, the interval between the ebb and flow is employed in detaching the oysters, in picking up those which fall to the ground, and in strengthening or putting the palisades into good condition. In these few hours it is hardly possible to get day labourers together to attend to the most pressing wants.

The oysters in the parks are estimated at five millions; the result is small, but we must not lose sight of the results of the winter of 1870-71, and the discouragement which naturally followed. It is also to be remembered that Le Vivier-sur-Mer was ten years ago absolutely unknown as an ostricultural station.

As regards the growth of the oyster, it is really marvellous at this station, and I have during the whole course of my inquiry seen only one, Les Sables d'Olonne, which can be compared to Le Vivier in this respect. I have myself taken from a fascine an oyster of 14 or 15 months old, which did not measure less than 7·8 centimètres.

It remains to say a few words about a happy transformation brought about by M. de la Gervinais. The salt water runs every tide into a millsluice, in which oysters have been laid to fatten, and the fresh water of a small brook is also emptied into the sluice.

In this particular spot the development and growth of the oyster has taken place with mavellous rapidity, and this phenomenon is attributed to the fresh water, the presence of which is very favourable, and above all to the numerous elements of nutrition brought by the brook.

Fossemort, near Saint Malo.

In 1873 M. Camac obtained a concession from the Minister of Marine, of 3 hectares on the River Rance, near Ménéhic. The Rance formerly contained several oyster-beds, and more recently, as I said in the introduction, M. de Bon succeeded in re-establishing some oyster beds. At first M. Camac had little success; but the more numerous the obstacles, the more obstinately did M. Camac, who is an American, set to work to overcome them.

The upper part of the area worked rises in the shape of an amphitheatre. It is 150 to 200 mètres from the bed of the river, and the sea covers it at every tide, except during neap tide. It was here that the first claires were excavated, measuring 40 mètres in length by 10 in breadth, and 0·6 in depth, which served for the first experiments.

The oysters and spat employed came from Auray. On arrival the spat already adhering to collectors, was detached and enclosed in cases of galvanised wire placed in the claires. The oysters of 18 months' growth were enclosed in similar cases, and were put into deep water.

The spat made no progress during the summer; the cold of winter carried away the greater part, but the oysters on the bottom prospered. In the month of October the cases containing these latter specimens were taken into the upper basins, which, as I have just said, are uncovered, and receive the sea at almost every tide. There they soon got fat, and became green, but when as winter set in, sickness carried them off. The summer was not more favourable, and out of 15,000 "young oysters," scarcely 3,000 survived.

This series of mishaps disclosed certain facts which did not escape the observation of M. Camac. He concluded that the upper part of the area of his operations did not afford the conditions necessary for the growth of the mollusc. Having tried, without satisfactory results, to alter the character of his cases, he determined next year to place all his "young oysters" at the edge of the river, on a point which is left uncovered only at spring tides, and at a depth of 30 mètres at high-water.

At the following spring tide it was seen that the oysters had visibly progressed, and by the month of October they had attained a size exceeding expectation.

Three thousand spat were sent last year from Auray to Fossemort; the tiles upon which they were fastened remained in the claires up to April of this year, when the separation of the oysters was effected. The spat was divided among 350 cases for oysters set up in the lower part of the concession. Every month these cases are inspected, and the mud which has deposited itself inside, and the marine plants which, by sticking to the wires, impede the circulation of the water, are removed.

At the end of the month of August of this year the growth rose from 2 to 200½.

In spite of all the losses sustained in former years, M. Camac expects this year to deliver for consumption from 270,000 to 300,000 oysters measuring 7 to 9 centimètres.

Fossemort belongs, both as regards methods and climate, to the Norman group of ostricultural stations. Before proceeding further to take up the coast of Brittany, I shall try to summarise the impressions which the establishments which I have already passed in review have left upon me, I should say that these establishments are really part and parcel of one another. Each station corresponds to one phase in the rearing of the oyster. Le Vivier produces the spat, Grand Camp affords the rearing in the first stage, at La Hougue and Cancale the oysters grow and fatten, and Courseulle prepares them for sending away.

Brest.

The maritime district of Brest is the one which contains the greatest number of oyster-beds, but, as everywhere else, these natural banks were at one time exhausted by the improvidence and cupidity of the fishermen. Speaking only of the Bay of Brest, where formerly 27 could be counted, it appears from official documents (the communication of which I owe to the kindness of the commissaire-général, M. Dauriac), that at present only 17 remain, and of this number there are only six in which any traces of reproduction are met with. M. Coste ascertained this deteriorated state of things, which was far advanced even in 1857, and with the view of remedying it, he caused a large number of fascines to be laid down in the bay, but the sea carried them all away, and the attempts were abandoned.

Is it fair to say that the fishermen were the sole authors of this destruction? Without doubt they had the greatest share in it, but natural circumstances, to a certain extent, helped to complete it. The piercing whelk (murex), so formidable to the bivalve of which I speak, at one time infested the greater part of the oyster-beds in Brittany, and caused incalculable damage; many beds were even wholly destroyed.

In

In the Bay of Brest another cause was added to the foregoing, namely, that in some years the grounds were overgrown with red seaweed, a marine plant most inimical to reproduction. There are, however, always some compensating agencies at work. At the same time that the grounds were covered with red seaweed, masses of maërl, a sort of coral, formed in the vicinity of the old beds, and young oysters were afterwards found attached to the calcareous arborisations which were pulled up. This fact indicates either the reconstruction of the old oyster-beds or the formation of new ones.

I must not omit to note how difficult it is to watch the oyster-beds in this small area of the sea. The Bay of Brest, which is not less than 40 miles in extent, is bordered by creeks, where marauders, warned by their comrades on the watch, can seek a refuge from the pursuit of the fishery guards. Provided with light boats, which draw but little water, and possessing a perfect knowledge of all the creeks and windings of the coast, they speedily find refuge in spots where the boats of the State cannot reach them. The Administration of Marine has used all its influence to persuade them that fishing without moderation nips the coming harvest in the bud; but the facilities which the railroads offer for the rapid and easy transport of the fruit of their marauding have prevailed over these wise counsels. Coercive measures have been powerless to repress their rapacity.

Such was the state of affairs a few years ago. At present it is a little better. The number of marauders is also smaller, for now they no longer find the means of subsistence in the exercise of their unlawful employment.

From an ostriculturist's point of view, the Bay of Brest would seem wonderfully favourable for his operations. But the sea is exceedingly rough in bad weather, and rapid currents cross it in all directions. People recollect, too, how unfortunate and useless were the efforts made there by M. Coste in 1857. From that time no one has dreamt of working these shores, the waters of which are apparently so beautiful and tranquil.

In 1874, a more determined man, M. Thomas, an engineer, imbued with new ideas as to the method of collecting the spat at a great depth, as to the development, rearing, and parking of the oyster, obtained from the Minister of Marine the concession called Moulin-Blanc. This part of the bay receives a little current of fresh water, which can be utilised with great advantage. M. Thomas established parks there, and stocked them with oysters. The experiments commenced rest solely on theories of his own; they are still too recent for us to be able to appreciate the result. Hitherto this gentleman has conducted his experiments more as a scientific than as a commercial man. He has studied the Bay of Brest, its water, its ordinary temperature, the winds which usually prevail there, the currents which traverse it; in fact, everything from which he can expect to derive any advantage. He records with care the observations of each day, and I sincerely hope that so much trouble will not be in vain, both for this indefatigable inquirer and for the science of ostriculture.

Bélon, near Quimper.

The establishment created by MM. de Mauduit and de Solminihac in the River of Bélon is one of the most interesting of those I have visited in the course of my mission.

This concession comprises about five hectares. On one side it extends along the right bank, and includes on the other a vast estuary in the shape of a horseshoe.

I have rarely met with oysters artificially raised, or even oysters caught on the banks, so beautifully shaped, or of so exquisite a taste. The shell is fine, thin, transparent, hard, and well-pearled in the interior. It shows on the outside marked but delicate indentations, a characteristic indication of a vigorous growth as well as of the perfect health of the oyster which it encloses. There are many reasons which insure to the establishment at Bélon the highest pre-eminence, quite apart from the actual value of its productions. They are simultaneously owing to the exceptional situation of the establishment, to the favourable nature of the soil, to the influence of the currents, to the composition of the waters, and to the exceptional and enlightened care which is unremittingly bestowed upon the young oysters.

Four kilomètres from the common mouth of the River of Pont-Avon and of that of Bélon, the parks of MM. de Mauduit and de Solminihac are constantly being washed by the waters of the ocean, which become aërated by breaking against the rocks which skirt this wild and picturesque coast. Their situation presents the same advantageous conditions as the ground in the open sea, where the natural oyster-beds lie; further, they are sheltered from storms.

The bed of the river is composed almost entirely of sand mixed with shells, and is very rich in calcareous matter. The flux and reflux of the ocean, while causing an incessant agitation in the water, give rise to perpetual currents.

The concession is divided:—First, into parks, in which are placed the cases containing the spat, and which are only uncovered at spring tides; they are generally situated in the lower parts of the river. Secondly, into parks, where the adult oysters are spread to make them grow, thicken, and fatten; the ground on which the adult oysters are placed is every year improved by the deposit of a load of shelly sand containing 80 per cent. of calcareous matter. Thirdly, into basins, capable of submersion, which receive the water at each tide, and are intended to shelter the cases during the winter, and serve equally as depôts for the marketable oysters which are being prepared for sending away; these basins communicate with each other, and can be easily emptied and cleaned at low tide. Lastly, in a large reservoir, which cannot be submerged, constructed in a bend of the river, are enclosed other cases and cemented basins, suitable for preserving and rearing the oyster.

The spat comes from Auray, from the parks of reproduction situated at Fort Espagnol, belonging to MM. de Mauduit and de Solminihac; on its arrival it is poured into oyster-boxes, which remain at 25 or 30 centimètres from the bottom, on pickets driven into the ground, and also on cross-pieces of wood secured by stakes.

The spat remains in the cases in deep water from the month of April to the month of October. It is transferred to the reserve basins for the winter, and in the spring is spread on the bottom of the parks for fattening.

The average yearly growth of the oyster varies between three and four-and-a-half centimètres; with the adult oyster it is rather less, but attains from two-and-a-half centimètres to three-and-a-half centimètres. This depends greatly upon where the oysters come from, and the parks in which they are placed; the oysters from Quimper grow the most rapidly. As to the dredged oysters found at Auray, many of them become sluggish, and make no progress during one season, but they make up for lost time in the following season.

The oysters in the cases are left untouched during the fine weather; too frequent interference with them would probably lead to breakage of the recent formation. Before placing them in winter quarters, they are passed through a sieve, in order to classify them according to their size. The spat and the little dredged oysters undergo this sorting, in order that the oysters in the same case may all be of the same size.

The oysters ready to be sent to the market are laid flat on the ground, and are frequently shifted about and cleaned. The workmen employed in this branch take the opportunity to fill up with sand the inequalities caused either by the flow or reflow of the waves, or by crabs, and in this way the oysters lie only on perfectly even ground.

MM. de Mauduit and de Solminihac have observed some interesting phenomena in their parks which deserve notice in this Report. With regard to the adult oyster, the fattening of which is desired, they have remarked that the oftener it is shifted the more it increases in size. They have also perceived that the oysters in cases develop mainly in size; in the parks, on the contrary, they develop in thickness. Lastly, they have proved that the nearer the oysters are brought to the channels where the currents are continuous, the more they gain in size.

Some attempts at reproduction made in the upper part of the concession, in the neighbourhood of some parks filled with oysters, have not been unsuccessful. This year on each tile could be counted from 70 to 80 spat. MM. de Mauduit and de Solminihac began at Bélon not more than five or six years ago, and in spite of imperfect knowledge, and the deceptions inseparable from first attempts, they are in a condition to deliver for consumption two-and-a-half millions of perfectly beautiful oysters, while preserving six-and-a-half millions in in their parks. They have, moreover, benefited their country by the spectacle of a model ostricultural establishment, and dispelled many prejudices, by utilising lands which a few years ago would have been considered unfit for the cultivation of the oyster.

Lorient.

The natural aspects which are found at Lorient show that the oyster industry can flourish there.

The Blavet, or River of Hennebont, which falls into the bay, contained not long ago oyster-banks which yielded choice oysters; it was evident, therefore, that the mollusc could obtain in this bay what it requires. At Kermélo, on the River Ter, in a spot situated a little below Lorient, MM. Charles and Turlure have founded their establishments.

After having tried unsuccessfully to collect the spat furnished by the oyster-beds of the River Hennebont, MM. Charles directed their operations in another channel; the rearing and fattening of the oyster was the end which they desired to attain.

The Ter is a river with a muddy bottom; it is far from wide, and at low water of spring tides nothing remains but a narrow channel; the grounds which can be utilised are consequently very limited in extent. A reserve pond, situated a little above, allows fresh water to escape into the river.

Before deriving any profit from this part of the maritime domain, considerable difficulties have to be surmounted. Before thinking of laying down oysters on this moving mass of mud, it was necessary to consolidate it. MM. Charles succeeded in making the soil solid, by spreading gravel and sand over their concession.

M. Turlure attained the same result by other means; thinking that the work of consolidation on his concession would involve too great expense, he adopted a system of cemented basins, invented by M. Michel, an engineer, which permitted him to utilise all the projecting (emergentes) portions of his parks.

These basins, which are 50 centimètres in length by 30 or 40 in breadth, and are arranged in rows, between which space is left open for working the parks, present this advantage, that the oysters enclosed in them cannot be injured by the variations of temperature, for they retain a depth of from 10 to 12 centimètres of water when the tide goes down.

The Oyster Society, of which M. Turlure is the director, possesses 60,000 of these basins. The capacity of these receptacles varies with the size of the oyster in the first stage and during the first year each basin will contain 300; in the second, 150; in the third, 75.

These parks are not the only ones established on the ground worked under the management of M. Turlure. At the back of the workshops and warehouses two large asphalted basins, of 80 metres in length by 21 in width, serve as parks for reception of oysters, for sending them off, and for their preparation for travelling. They are divided into seven compartments, in which the oysters are classed according to their size and origin. They communicate with the river by a canal, and the water in them can be renewed when required.

For some years this establishment has enjoyed a real importance; from M. Turlure's own statement, there are 10 millions of oysters in the parks and river taken together.

The establishment of MM. Charles, as described above, is completed by other basins dug out above the river beyond the dune which divides private properties from the public maritime domain. A canal between the sea and the parks at the extremity of which is a floodgate, serves to distribute the water which supplies this establishment, and which can be renewed nine or ten days out of fifteen.

The basins are not all used for the same purpose; one is set apart for those oysters which are undergoing purgation and fasting as a preliminary to being shortly sent away; others contain cases and metallic hurdles, on which the spat, or even oysters on the point of becoming eatable, are spread. These same pieces of water also serve to shelter the spat reared in the river during the winter season, when severe cold is apprehended.

Although the reservoirs communicate with each other, and are supplied by the same water, yet they give different results. In one, the furthest from the mouth of the channel, the bottom is composed of mud and clay, and in it the oyster easily gains from 450½ to 500 in a year. The neighbouring park, which is only separated from the other by a narrow strip of land, can scarcely nourish the oysters placed in it. These are anomalies which may be explained by the larger or smaller amount of food which emanates directly from the soil, and by numerous oozings of fresh water into the park where the development of the mollusc is so marked.

MM. Charles sold, in 1875, 5,500,000 oysters, of which 2,500,000 were fit for consumption. The spat which is reared comes from Auray, and I will add that they produce in the basins of Lorient specimens which are distinguished by the delicacy of their taste, and by the fineness and lightness of their shells. I have seen a great number of them that yield in no respect to the oysters of Ostend.

Auray and La Trinité are, with Arcachon, the most important oyster centres on our coast. Reproduction is the great object at these places. The oyster-bed in the River of Auray is no less than three leagues in length; it extends from the mill of Poulben and from the chapel of St. Avoy as far as the canal of Coat-Courzo, and forms an uninterrupted chain of banks, occupying an area of more than 300 hectares.

In the neighbouring River of La Trinité, which is also called the River of Crach, are likewise found numerous oyster-banks, but of less extent.

Ostriculture in this part of Morbihan dates back a dozen years. The development which has taken place must not be attributed solely to private enterprise. Government has had a considerable share in it. The application of legislative measures met with much hostility from the fishermen, but the first thing to be taken into consideration was, naturally, the preservation of the beds, which were being pillaged without restraint, and without discretion. What would have become of the oyster industry at Auray and at La Trinité if those banks which, at the present day, form the wealth of the park-owners, had disappeared? As M. Platel, who has written a very complete and exact paper on Ostriculture in Morbihan, from which I have borrowed very valuable information, judiciously remarks, we cannot too often remember how much perseverance and care it required on the part of the Maritime Administration in the districts of Lorient, Vannes, and Auray to save the wrecks of that wealth which is disseminated in the Rivers of Morbihan.

My report on Auray would certainly be incomplete if I did not render a tribute to the devotedness of the Commissaire of the Inscription Maritime, M. Coste, whose praise is in every mouth. This honourable functionary, prompted by the spirit of the administrative instructions, encourages and advises on every side.

It would be impossible for me, in this short statement to pass in review all the establishments on the River Auray. I will therefore take as a model one of the most complete and best organised with regard to reproduction, and the one which I have perhaps studied the most; it is the establishment of M. de Thévenard.

The seat of the works of M. Thévenard, Mayor of Auray, is at a place called Le Rocher. This concession comprises parks of reproduction, and some claires for rearing and preservation. These parks are established, the former on a bottom of mud three or four metres thick, the latter on a more solid soil. Buildings erected on the banks of the river serve as workshops for detaching, sorting, and liming, and at the same time as places for keeping the oyster-cases.

In front of these buildings, and only a few metres from low-water mark, claires have been dug which can retain water, and in which during the winter is placed the harvest of the season to preserve it from the cold.

The collectors employed by M. de Thévenard differ according to the nature of the soil. On muddy grounds they are composed of a cluster of ten tiles crossed, one above the other, two and two, suspended on a stake two metres high. A platform nailed 30 centimètres below the tiles, prevents the apparatus from sinking in the mud. This extremely ingenious plan, which allows of placing collectors on all the muddy bottoms of the rivers in Morbihan, was invented by M. Eugene Le Roux, and M. de Thévenard has perfected it by adding a second platform above the first.

On more solid grounds the usual hives are used, or else tiles are merely placed one above the other on cross-pieces of wood, sometimes also boards are made use of as collectors. The collectors are plastered over before their immersion.

This

This operation is effected in the following manner. According to the method of M. Martin, of the River Crach, which M. de Thévenard has adopted, some mud, to which a tenth part of hydraulic lime has been added, is diluted in a large tub of sea-water. It is necessary that this mixture should be sufficiently liquid for it to spread and adhere easily everywhere. The collectors are then plunged into these baths. Three or four hours after, and before this layer is quite dry, the apparatus is again soaked in another tub, in which there is only hydraulic lime and sea-water.

The collectors are put in their places at the commencement of June, the time when the emission of the spat commences, which is sometimes prolonged until the month of August, and even a little later in the River of Bono; they are taken out, for picking off, at the beginning of winter.

M. de Thévenard conducts this operation by means of a barge, on which is fixed a lever, one of the extremities of which is provided with a cord and a hook for raising the collectors in the water. This method saves much time, for they can be quickly raised, and in any depth of water. The picking off takes place, if from the board-collectors, in November and December, if from the tiles in the month of March of the following year.

The oysters picked off are collected into the oyster-cases before the commencement of winter; and when there is no longer any reason to fear severe cold, the cases are let down into the river, where growth is more rapid.

Establishment of Le Brénéguy.

Not far from the River of Auray, behind Locmariaker, a very interesting establishment has been created by the company of which M. d'Argy is the director. This establishment occupies an area of 45 hectares in the basin of Le Brenéguy. Shut in by the coast, separated towards the west from the sea by a natural dyke which is proof against submersion, it communicates with the ocean by the inlet of Kerlud. Another dyke of 145 metres, constructed of earth and masonry, and furnished with two sluices, closes the basin on this side, protects it from storms, and maintains in Le Brenéguy the level of high water.

This vast preserve contains 900,000 cubic mètres of water, and its depth varies from one to three mètres. The sluices are only opened at spring-tides, consequently the water is not changed oftener than twice a month. The winds which constantly blow on the coasts of Morbihan keep up the aëration of the water, and prevent its becoming stagnant. The bottom is of granite, covered in some places by a slight layer of mud.

It is needless to say that the oysters reared in this establishment, which was only created two years ago, come from Auray or La Trinité. The spat is shut up in metallic cases with wooden frames, and the young oysters, which have nothing to fear from crabs, are laid on the ground The oyster grows rapidly in the basin of Le Brenéguy, and the qualities which can be acquired there are analogous to those for which Bélon is famous.

As at Bélon, oysters dredged and laid down quickly alter, and an advantageous change in the shell takes place.

M. d'Argy proposes to complete the work, already so advanced at Le Brenéguy, by attempts at reproduction on a large scale. My opinion is that this establishment, which can already deliver many millions of oysters for consumption, has a great future in prospect.

On the River of La Trinité, I shall mention, among others, the establishments of Dr. Gressy, to whom are due certain improvements effected in the methods of culture.

The Isle of Cuhan, where he has settled down to work, contains rearing-basins cut in the rocks. Owing to their high situation, they are only watered twice a week. In these basins Dr. Gressy has tried to obtain the greening of the oyster. The end desired has been obtained. But the oysters lost in travelling a part of the colouring which distinguishes the Marennes oysters. The methods of cultivating the oyster are about the same at La Trinité as at Auray.

Nevertheless, in the River Crach, some park-owners find it preferable to separate their young oysters at the beginning of winter. This premature separation is justified by the fact that the spat grows more quickly in the River of La Trinité, and its shell is strong enough to stand the operation at this time.

Other rearers in this locality have a peculiar system of separation. Instead of merely detaching the spat, they break the part of the tile to which it adheres.

This method has for its object the dispensing with the employment of oyster-cases: 1st, because the young oyster, being protected by this second defence, cannot easily become the prey of its enemies; 2nd, because the fragment of tile adhering to the shell increases the weight of the oyster, and allows of its being laid in open parks without being liable to be carried off by currents.

I must also mention the fine basins belonging to MM. Leroux, constructed in full stream and capable of submersion, in which the oysters can be kept till of full age; those of M. Martin, and the splendid establishment of the Baron de Wolbock. I must not forget the parks belonging to the Association of Sea Fishermen of La Trinité. In 1869 the Administration of Marine, with a view of favouring the development of that branch of ostriculture, which has for its object the gathering of spat, distributed to this association, as well as to other seamen, concessionnaires of parks who worked on their own account, 150,000 tiles in all. The association prospers, and its commercial importance advances in proportion to its growing success.

The River of Saint-Philibert, between Auray and Crach, the River of Vannes (of which I shall shortly speak), the inland sea of Morbihan, are places fitted for rearing and parking the oyster. It will be enough for me to refer to the establishments of the Society of Saint-Anne, of MM. Eden and Fardin at Peningtoul, of M. Pozzi, and of M. Leclaire, which are in full activity.

What then is the actual state of ostriculture in the district of Auray? I can say, without fear of contradiction, that it is in a thriving condition. One thing alone is wanting, namely, sufficient openings. The stations in Normandy and the few establishments in Brittany, where rearing alone is carried on, are not sufficient to find room for the hundreds of millions of young oysters which are collected yearly in the two rivers of Auray and La Trinité, which are of inexhaustible fertility. The harvest of spat in 1876 will be even more considerable than in former years.

At first it was considered satisfactory if 20 or 25 embryos stuck on a single tile; now the average number is over 250 to 300. Some tiles even are found bearing more than 1,000 specimens.

I shall conclude with some statistical figures which the Commissaire at Auray has been good enough to furnish me with, and which will sum up eloquently all that I could now add:—

The total number of oyster establishments conceded and worked is 297, which comprise 277 parks and 20 claires.

During the season of 1875–76, 4,401,400 dredged oysters were placed in the parks. Their approximate value was 118,425 francs 18 cents.

During the same period 7,538,150 oysters out of these very parks sold for 202,801 francs. The difference between the number of oysters put in and that taken out is made up by the spat that each park-owner rears every year.

The number of spat sold during the same time, either to the establishments on the coast or to strangers, and resulting from the clearing of the tiles, has been 26,176,300, representing a value of 102,385 francs.

In 1874, on collectors comprising 2,580,370 tiles, 110,563,750 spat were born. This is allowing for losses resulting from picking off and from death. Auray under this head is responsible for 66,195,900. There remained in the parks, on the 1st January 1876, 97,348,950 spat, of which more than 60,000,000 were in the Syndicate of Auray. But, without exaggeration, the spat remaining for disposal may be estimated at 120,000,000. The concessionnaires, as a rule, complain of little but low prices.

Without counting the associations of working fishermen, and setting aside the cost of labour, which is almost nothing, the number of working-days of the staff employed in the parks during the last season has been as follows:—for men, 35,819 days; for women, 51,709 days; for children, 2,150 days; altogether, 89,678 days.

The result of this work is that the natural oyster-beds, kept in good order, well watched, and moderately worked, become more and more fertile, and the fishery on these banks, which it was feared would disappear for ever, has, on the contrary, become more productive.

It

It should further be stated that, in the case of families willing to work, misery has been succeeded by comfort; and it must not be forgotten that the district of Auray is only commencing this industry.

Vannes.

Before the gathering of spat had become a considerable branch of industry in the district of Auray, efforts were, as regards the Gulf of Morbihan and the River of Vannes, confined to allowing the oysters dredged on the hitherto fertile banks of that bay to grow in the parks. M. Chaumel had, however, for some years past entertained the idea of making trials in reproduction, but they were without result.

The banks of the Sea of Morbihan had already been long exhausted, and trawl-fishing, which was continually practised, had prevented the few embryos which the still remaining oysters produced from becoming fixed or growing. The Administration of Marine perceived that these oyster-beds, which had been almost annihilated for the past 15 years, at least, could not be saved from total ruin except by maintaining a watch and by restricting trawl-fishing. Measures were taken with this view, and the reconstructing of the banks was set about. For this purpose 130,000 brood oysters, covered with a considerable number of young ones sticking to their shells, were brought from the banks of the River of Auray to the inland sea of Morbihan, and spread upon the old banks. This action was followed by the best results, and these attempts were crowned with complete success, especially on the bank of Bernon.

The situation is now far better; the spat is visible in various places, and we may assume that in less than 10 years, perhaps, the Gulf of Morbihan will have recovered its former wealth and fertility. I shall now inquire as to the point at which ostriculture has arrived in the maritime district of Vannes. There is progress, and unquestionable progress. In 1874 the number of parks conceded was 140; it has since risen to 356.

The ostricultural industry at Vannes is divided into two sections, reproduction and rearing. Reproduction is the least important branch. Rearing, on the contrary, succeeds in an encouraging manner.

The immense area of projecting grounds in the Gulf of Morbihan presents favourable conditions. The sea is often disturbed, it is true; but the numerous currents running through it in every direction are, on the other hand, but an element of success when once solid parks have been successfully established.

Three hundred thousand tiles for receiving the spawn have this year been placed on the various points in the Vannes river; the number of the spat adhering to each is estimated, according to the locality, at 30 to 60.

Among the special establishments which have been founded in the vicinity of Vannes, I shall mention that of MM. Duchélas & Co., on the Isle of Bailleron, which has, for dependencies, two parks on the Isle of Lerne and the Isle of Illure, and those of MM. Chaumel, Vincent and Liazard, and de Lamazelle and Paul.

Five thousand tiles were put down as a trial by M. Duchélas & Co. in the neighbourhood of the banks of Bernon and of Bailleron.

Establishment of M. Pozzi.

The establishment which M. Pozzi organised at Ludré, with the aid of M. Dalido, in 1874, may be classed among the best in Brittany. It is situated near Sarzeau, in the Gulf of Morbihan. It comprises: 1st, preserve parks of an area of 5 hectares, which are old salt-marshes transformed; 2nd, a discharge reservoir; 3rd, two submersible basins. It has for dependencies parks for rearing and laying at the Isle of Kistinie and the Isle of Lerne. The basins meant for preserving oysters during the winter are fed on one side by a great pond of 40 hectares, receiving water at every tide, except neap-tides; and on the other by a floodgate, which allows passage for the rising tide, and by which the water is let out when the basins are emptied.

The soil is composed of mud and sand, but is generally firm.

The system which has been adopted by M. Pozzi as the basis of the works in connection with the rearing of the oyster is the system of continuous currents. This was suggested to M. Pozzi by the conditions in which the natural oyster-banks are found. He has had every reason to congratulate himself on the steps he has taken. In the first year (1875) the results were marvellous; this year they surpass all expectations. It is by means of the 40-hectare pond, and of the floodgate at the end opposite to the pond, that perpetual circulation is kept up in the waters of the park.

One of these preserve-basins is in part concreted, and this is the one in which the oysters are laid during the winter, to allow of their growing thicker. This arrangement, which would doubtless be of little advantage in a small establishment, has been rendered necessary by the presence at the bottom of these salt-marshes of vegetable matter in decomposition.

This park measures 2 hectares; it is divided into five parallel receptacles, 200 metres long by 15 broad, each furnished with a sluice-gate in direct communication with the pond. It is with a view of keeping up the whole force of the current that M. Pozzi has established this division; without this precaution, if the water were brought in by only one opening, the current would be dissipated in this immense area of 2 hectares, and neither the oysters on the sides nor those at the bottom would be benefited by its influence.

As may be seen, M. Pozzi follows up the principle with which he has started.

In organising submersible basins he has been guided by the same principles. These basins are cut in the rock, and surrounded by walls of cemented stone 60 to 80 centimètres thick, and 80 centimètres high, reckoning from the level ground, and are situated at the end of a sort of little isthmus very near the work-buildings They are about equal in size, and measure together 50 metres in length by 28 or 29 in breadth, and receive water every tide. Each compartment contains 200 cases arranged in a line with the direction of the rising tide, and separated from each other by spaces of 50 centimètres. All the cases are numbered, which prevents the spat brought from different places being mixed up confusedly, and allows of its progress being ascertained. These boxes are ballasted by large stones. The interior is divided into five or six compartments, separated by cross-pieces of wood, so that the young oysters may not be displaced by the action of the sea. Under the influence of the currents the spat attains an extraordinary development; and I have seen young oysters picked off this year, which in the course of three months had grown from 4 centimètres to $4\frac{1}{2}$ centimètres.

Oysters of slow growth, whether the product of dredging or artificial rearing, soon attain a vigorous growth under this system. M. Pozzi this year placed 70,000 such oysters under the fall from his mill floodgates. He contrived by the regulating of his sluices to secure a strong current, almost to a cascade, and in 40 days these oysters, which had averaged 3 centimètres, attained to 6 and 7 centimètres.

The submersible basins, the park of Kistinie, and those of the Isle of Lerne, are devoted to rearing spat in cases; but the parts of these last parks, where the currents are not perceptible, are reserved for laying down, an operation to which oysters already 4 or 5 centimètres in size are subjected. The growth of the oysters laid on the soil is only about 2 centimètres, but the shell becomes round, deep, and of good form. The fish, without being fat, fills it well It is true that fattening is not the end which M. Pozzi has in view; he has simply tried to take advantage of the exceptional conditions that the scene of his work offered for rearing.

The operations of M. Pozzi, and what is meant in Brittany by rearing, properly so called, are as follows:

For example, the spat that M. Pozzi bought in March 1876 was produced at Auray towards the beginning of August in the preceding year. It was picked off in March 1876. It was carried to the Isle of Kistinie in the month of April, and at once put in cases, and after remaining two months part was sent to the principal establishment at Ludré to be placed in submersible basins.

The sale of such spat, which usually measures 4 or 6 centimètres, takes place in the month of September of the same year. If the buyer cannot take charge of it at once, or if the stock is not exhausted, the young oysters are transferred transferred to preserve parks for the winter. The merchants of Ile d'Oléron, Marennes, or La Tremblade, are usually the purchasers.

The extent of M. Pozzi's parks allows him to raise every year six or seven millions of oysters. This number will be able to be doubled when the works of rearrangement he has undertaken in the salt marshes at Ludré are completed.

Les Sables d'Olonne.

It is scarcely three or four years since ostriculture began to engage attention at Les Sables d'Olonne. Before that time there existed only depôts or mere holes in which merchants placed oysters which they went to Noirmoutiers to buy, whilst waiting the favourable time for sale. As a further illustration of the effects of the example set by the Ministry of Marine, the park-owners have at length decided to bring under culture the fertile submersible grounds of the basin of Les Chasses, and to convert them into parks.

The basin of Les Chasses is 64 hectares in area ; only 25 of which are devoted to the culture of the oyster. It receives sea-water only once a week, but for a period of two or three days consecutively. The soil consists of sand mixed with mud and clay. The water which comes into the claires is much charged with earthy matter picked up in the basin, and necessitates the frequent cleansing of the parks, any collecting of mud in which must be specially avoided.

These parks, or claires (as they are called at Les Sables), have an average area of 250 mètres. This area varies according as the establishments are more or less sheltered from the wind. The water is kept in the parks by embankments of earth, and only so much of it is retained as is absolutely necessary for the shelter of the young oyster from excessive heat; cold need not be much feared at Les Sables d'Olonne. The park-owners affirm that the less the quantity of water in a claire, and consequently the more an oyster is exposed to the action of heat and light, the more it grows.

Rearing and fattening are the phases of culture of oysters with which the rearers at Les Sables are familiar. Their methods are based on theories opposed to those of M. Pozzi at Ludré ; at Les Sables, in fact, there are no currents ; the water is seldom changed, and stays eight days in the basins. Last year, indeed, owing to the construction of some works in the port, the water remained in the claires for a whole month, without any bad effect. It is, nevertheless, astonishing to see the quick and truly surprising growth of the mollusc. In a single forenoon it will effect a growth of a centimètre. Sometimes eight-and-forty hours will suffice for a young oyster, wounded in picking off, to remake its shell solidly enough to shelter it from its enemies.

The spat comes from Auray ; it is sent in cases lined throughout with wet seaweed. Some park-owners have it brought on tiles, place it in reserve, and commence picking it off later. At first it is put in oyster cases, where it remains from a fortnight to a month, in order that that which is sick may have time to recover ; afterwards it is laid at the bottom of the claires.

Two years in the parks amply suffice for a young oyster to become eatable. The following are some notes which I have made respecting specimens reared by M. Monnier :—

An oyster, considered a good medium one, which was produced at Auray in 1875, picked off at Auray in January 1876, and being from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 centimètres in size when put in the park in the month of April, measured at the beginning of September of that year 7·8 centimètres.

Another, produced in 1874, picked off and parked in April 1875, measured exactly $9\frac{1}{2}$ centimètres in the beginning of September 1876.

Again, a specimen produced in 1873, had acquired, by the month of September 1876, the enormous size of 11·4 centimètres.

The operations which take place at M. Monnier's take place also at the establishment of Dr. Leroux. Dr. Leroux, in the month of March of this year, had brought from his parks at La Trinité spat of 1875, picked off in January 1876. When I arrived at Les Sables these young oysters were from 7 to $7\frac{1}{2}$ centimètres in size. The mode of treating oysters at Les Sables is the same as everywhere else ; the manipulations are neither more nor less frequent ; silting up with mud is prevented ; the parks are kept up with care ; the hair weeds which form in them are removed; too many oysters are not allowed to be together in one basin, and from time to time the parks are left to rest.

In spite of the small extent of the concessions, about 10,000,000 of oysters, of which hardly one-eighth is the result of dredging, are raised yearly at Les Sables d'Olonne. It is to be presumed that production will not stop at this stage. The transformation into claires of the salt-marshes near the oyster-parks will take place before long.

Ile de Ré.

At the Ile de Ré rearing and reproduction are carried on, but the ostricultural industry is not very important there. The grounds suitable for the culture of the oyster are of limited extent, and, further, it is not possible to utilise the beach west of the island, owing to the violence of the sea, which is called on that side the mer sauvage. Of the parks now existing, I shall mention those of M. Dupeux-Boyer. They have been made now 15 years, and are in the outworks of an old mill; they are situated at Le Martray, on the mer sauvage side, but shielded from its attacks, on one side by a dune, on the other by the Bay of Bien-d'Ars, which waters them by means of a canal. They are divided into claires, of which the average dimension is from 50 to 60 mètres in length by 20 to 30 in breadth, which are separated from each other by embankments of earth 25 to 30 centimètres high. These claires receive water every tide.

M. Dupeux-Boyer, an experienced person, has remarked, like the park-owners of Les Sables d'Olonne, that the less water there is in the parks the more the young oysters grow. The bottom is sand and clay, and the mud forms at the surface a layer of 20 or 30 centimètres thick, and firm enough to prevent the oysters from sinking in it.

The claires of Le Martray are cleaned once or twice a year, and are used for rearing and fattening.

The oysters in them come from Arcachon, or are bred in the reproduction parks which M. Dupeux-Boyer possesses in another part of the isle, at a place known as La Moulinatte; or else they have been gathered on the coast by fishers on foot. Although for a long time the banks in the neighbourhood of the isle have been exhausted, there exist a few stray oysters, the spawn of which attaches itself either to the rocks or to pebbles which the waves roll and cast upon the shore. The fishers by hand call them native oysters, or wandering oysters. Their shell is rough, but regular and deep.

In the parks of reproduction, where it would be impossible, having regard to the state of the sea, to fix collecting apparatus, the spat is received on boulders simply. The picking of it off at the first stage is difficult. Two or three years are necessary for the Arcachon oyster to become edible in the claires at Le Martray. Native oysters are less subject to mortality, and they grow more in the same space of time, the shell becomes deeper, and the fish larger.

The parks of Le Martray have the property, like those of Marennes, of greening the oyster. Certain specimens at the Ile de Ré never take the green colour, which begins to show itself amongst the greater number of oysters towards the September equinox.

Ile d'Oléron.

At Oléron, which may be considered as a dependency of Marennes, the rearing, fattening, and reproduction of the oyster are principally carried on. In 1873 the year was bad; the spat did not adhere to the collectors; and the discouraged rearers abandoned their parks. To avoid total ruin, the Administration of Marine interposed, organised model parks, sent for 250,000 brood oysters from Arcachon to be laid down in "La Courant;" it sought, moreover, to restore the courage of the park-owners, who had given way to needless fears. Its advice was taken; and the parks, which had been damaged by mud and by mussels, were soon put into good condition. The rearing since then has succeeded so well that no one thinks now of giving up ostriculture.

In 1875 some park-owners of Arcachon established themselves on the Island of Oléron, and the quantity of oysters they brought was so considerable that the collectors collectors were covered with spat. This same year, the experimental park of the Administration of Marine received abundance of spawn; oysters and collectors were also placed in "La Courant," to form there the basis of a natural bank, and consequently a focus of reproduction. At the Castle, which is the principal centre of labour, there are 2,000 parks, 700 at Saint Trojan, 300 at Dolus; 270 hectares are in working order. These localities are situated opposite the mouth of the Seudre. At the Castle the parks commence at one kilometre from high-water mark, and end at four kilometres.

This year 300,000 tiles have been immersed; it is a strange circumstance that these collectors have not been submitted to the process of liming; the plaster could not resist the wind and intense cold, which are so severe on this coast.

The spat from Brittany which is raised in the island generally succeeds better than that from Arcachon. The rearers say that the oysters imported from the north have a tendency to develope more quickly in the south. Without denying the effects of the influence of climate, it may be objected that this is not an absolute rule; the oysters of Portugal, although natives of a warmer country than ours, far from running any risk in our waters, attain an enormous size in them.

The younger the oysters are which arrive at Oléron, the quicker is their development. There are some park-owners, however, who assert that the dredged oysters grow more rapidly there than the tile oysters; the reason they give is, that this oyster, accustomed to live in deep water, is more sensitive to the action of light and heat, which promote a more rapid growth.

Mussels are the worst plague of the parks at Oléron. They multiply there in such number, that if the concessions are not visited each time that the tide allows of it, they soon cover the ground to a thickness of from 20 to 40 centimètres.

I will note, in passing, the efforts of M. Gaboriaud, who has successfully transformed salt-marshes into claires for rearing; but his experiences are too recent, and require confirmation.

Finally, to give some idea of the unexpected extension of the ostricultural industry at the Island of Oléron, I will remark that the parks, in the month of September of this year, contained more than 70,000,000 edible oysters. As to the young specimens which have not attained the regulation size, and the spat adhering to the collectors, it is impossible to estimate their numbers.

Marennes.

The oysters from Marennes enjoy an universal reputation. They owe their popularity to the peculiar taste contracted in the green claires. There is no part of the coast where the greening of the oyster is attained so easily and so rapidly. The question of ascertaining to what causes we must attribute the change which takes place in the colour of the mollusc, from the month of September until the time of gestation, has been discussed with various results. Some have thought that it was due to the essentially argillaceous soil of Marennes, to the brackish waters of the Seudre, to oxide of iron; others assert that it is owing to the kind of vegetation which lines the claires at the approach of winter, and which disappears in the spring; according to these the oyster owes its coloring to the absorption of the chlorophylle with which the waters of the claires are saturated. A fact of common observation is that the oyster assumes its green colour when the claire grows green, and loses its colour when the claire is deprived of its vegetation.

Although Marennes is very close to Oléron, the attempts at reproduction which have been made there have been without result. The captivity of the oyster does not lessen its generative powers, as certain rearers assert. In the spring the oyster, whether in claire or park, emits its spat; but it is to be supposed that the spat does not in the waters of Marennes, deeply charged as they are with earthy matter and perhaps too tranquil, meet with the conditions necessary to its existence. The grounds worked comprehend ponds, depôts, and claires. The ponds are little establishments of 400 square mètres, surrounded by walls of unmortared stone, 20 centimètres high, situated on the shore, and washed by the sea at each tide. The depôts are established on the muddy flats of the shore; they are limited by branches of tamarind, stuck in the mud, which at the same time serve as a line of demarcation. The claires are basins dug on the banks of the Seudre, from 30 to 35 centimètres deep.

The earth which has been taken out serves to form the slope, the summit of which is about 1 mètre from the bottom of the reservoir. They are divided into high and low claires; the low claires, nearer to the bed of the Seudre, receive the water pretty frequently; the high claires, further from the arm of the sea, and dug on ground comparatively higher, are only supplied during four or five days at springtide.

The greater number of claires are surrounded by a trench independent of the small streams (ruissons) of alimentation; into which are thrown the slimy deposits washed up by the sea.

The depth of the claires, I have said, varies from 30 to 35 centimètres; but in the autumn the water is not kept higher in them than from 24 to 30 centimetres. When the cold weather arrives, this depth is increased, for the frosts and snow are very severe, and the ice is immediately broken if it covers the reservoirs.

The low claires turn green first; this condition lasts from the month of September till the month of February; the high claires turn green in the month of November, and lose their colour towards the month of April.

The oysters reared at Marennes are produced in the parks at Oléron, or come from Brittany and Arcachon. Arcachon as a rule sends away a great part of its products as soon as they are fit for exportation.

The young oyster is immediately placed either in the ponds or depôts. In the month of November, after a stay of six or seven months, it is horned (corsée), and has attained a size of from 7 to 9 centimètres. A fortnight, three weeks, or a month, according to the position of the claire, is enough for the oyster to acquire the qualities requisite for consumption or "for the knife," as the park-owners at La Seudre express it.

Before leaving the parks, however, a final process has to be undergone by the oyster to enable it to bear travelling. For this purpose it is transferred to an asphalted or sanded receptacle which receives the freshest and purest waters: the oyster remains some days in this reservoir, purges, and is then washed and sent away.

Some riparian owners (among others MM. Blanchard, Jourdes, and Le Beau) have converted some salt-marshes situated beyond the maritime domain into oyster claires. The success of this enterprise has caused great interest in the district of Marennes. The grounds at the disposal of the Government have all been allotted, and yet numerous applications arrive every day.

It may now be said that the success of this transformation is certain.

The ostricultural industry at Marennes has considerably increased since 1873. Park-owners on a large scale have established themselves there, and have organised very complete works as regards arrangement and means of carriage. One of the most recent, belonging to M. de Faramond de Lafayole, is worth a few words of description.

This working ground is at the mouth of the Seudre, in the Bay of Sinche. The establishment is very skilfully divided, is composed of 12 claires, of about 40 square mètres, six placed on each side of a dike of 2 mètres. On this dike M. de Faramond, who has adopted the most recent improvements, has constructed a railway with an attendant waggon, to render the transport of his fish from the boats into the claires, later on into the cleansing reservoirs, and from thence to the packing works at the head of the concession, rapid and cheap. He finds it convenient to keep oysters of all qualities and sizes in each claire, thus he has but one receptacle to empty, whatever kind may be required, and he avoids the great inconvenience of opening a certain number of sluices, and drying up several layings at times when it would be impossible to refill them. M. de Faramond has completed his packing works by a double sorter, an ingenious machine which allows two women to classify 30,000 or 40,000 oysters in one day.

To conclude with some statistical details:—

In 1873, according to the register of sea fisheries, the number of shell-fish establishments was 2,564; in three years it has increased to 13,526.

The claires occupy on each side of the Seudre an area of 20 kilomètres in length by 1 kilomètre in breadth, say 4,000 hectares worked.

The

The number of oysters contained in the concessions is estimated at 80,000,000.

Finally, it may be said that ostriculture makes the fortune of the majority of the inhabitants of this region. Nearly all the families are proprietors or concessionaries of a park, a pond, or a claire, which they manage themselves. The workmen who are not tenants find employment in the great works, and earn from two to four francs for two hours' work during spring-tides. It should be added that the Administration of Marine has endeavoured to divide the grounds under its jurisdiction in the most equitable manner possible.

La Tremblade.

La Tremblade, situated on the left bank of the Seudre, is similar to Marennes, as regards the production, rearing, and greening of oysters. The soil, the methods, the culture are, with but trifling difference, identical.

I should have abstained from any special mention of the oyster industry at this station, if I had not collected some additional observations, which I will briefly summarise.

As at Marennes, there are ponds and claires. The ponds are at the entrance of the river, and are only uncovered at spring-tides. The spat is placed there to grow.

To a great number of rearers who do not possess ponds, the claires situated higher up serve at the same time for the rearing, fattening, and greening of the oyster.

La Tremblade rears easily the spat from Brittany, which, at the beginning of March or April, when it measures from 2 to 3 centimètres, is placed in the park, where it becomes fit for eating very rapidly.

The greening takes place in a few days. A fortnight is sufficient when the claire is "in the humour." But the greatest care must be taken not to empty the claire, as it would be a long time before it became green again.

The north-west winds delay the greening, while those from the south-west favour it. The latter being warmer and damper, the oyster opens more frequently.

The claires are not spacious, and it has been remarked, especially in the higher claires, which are only submerged three or four days at spring-tide, that the smaller they are the sooner and better the oyster turns green in them.

It has also been observed, in the parks where fresh water is sometimes too abundant, that the development is arrested, that the fish wastes away and quickly dies; and that if this water is entirely wanting, the oyster not only does not grow or fatten, but does not become green.

The Mur de Loup is the spot most favourable to greening. It is generally allowed that this is in consequence of the presence of fresh water. In fact, reeds grow on the edges of the claires which could not grow in salt water.

Thus the rearers of La Tremblade do not hesitate to attribute the greening of the oyster as much to the action of fresh water as to the nature of the soil. Some collectors have been placed in the ponds, but the spat of the Portugal oyster has alone adhered to them.

Le Verdon.

Here ostriculture is still in its infancy. The first efforts date from 1874, and were undertaken by MM. Péponnet and Tripota. They have succeeded but little, but it must not be concluded from this that the ostricultural industry cannot flourish in the roadstead of Le Verdon. Recent attempts have been made under better auspices, and if the fresh water, and the heaps of sand which the Gironde accumulates, the sole causes of non-success, can be avoided, Le Verdon will be, on the contrary, an admirably-situated station for oyster commerce. At least 80 hectares of beach are capable of being worked.

In the course of this report I have sometimes mentioned the Portugal oysters. Proposing to return to this subject on arriving at Le Verdon, I did not think it necessary to speak of it at length. The Portugal oyster has appeared for the last two or three years in our markets, it has become an article of public consumption, and, for persons of small means, takes the place of our French oyster, which is too expensive.

These oysters originate or come from an immense bank at the mouth of the Tagus. The shell is rough and ill-shaped, but it is deep, and generally well-filled. This mollusc is capable of acquiring a large and rapid development in our waters; it withstands the bad weather better, undergoes travelling more easily, acclimatises itself in places where our indigenous oyster can neither grow nor live, and accommodates itself to all waters. I am assured that its fecundity surpasses that of our oysters. Its embryos, endowed with powerful vitality, display much endurance, and can be carried a long distance by the current without being destroyed. The spat of these foreign oysters is often transported from La Gironde as far as La Rochelle, where, after having been fixed, on no matter what resisting body, it grows, fattens, and reproduces itself. It comes from a regular bed, which has formed itself not far from Verdon, on the old bank of Richard or De Goulée, nine miles from the mouth of the Gironde.

It is only six or seven years since a vessel laden with oysters from Portugal, on the point of sinking, discharged her cargo to repair her damages. A part of the oysters, supposed to be dead, were thrown into the river. These oysters have since multiplied at such a rate, and the bank has become so extended, that it is dredged without interruption, during the season in which the dredging is allowed, without exhausting it, or compromising its fertility.

In fact, this bed is a real fortune to the fishermen of the district, who reap from it an abundant and certain harvest every year.

Arcachon.

The most important oyster station on the coast of France, Arcachon, is without a rival in the world for the number of oyster-beds which are worked there, the value of the establishments founded in which ostriculture is carried on, and the stimulus to business to which this industry gives rise. The immense stretch of salt water which bears the name of the Basin of Arcachon, scooped out in the middle of a sandy plain, is in permanent communication with the Atlantic by a narrow opening. This little inland sea, into which several streams pour fresh water, a valuable auxiliary to the culture of the oyster, is subject to the same fluctuations as the ocean. It is traversed in every direction by currents, which keep up an incessant movement. These currents circulate in channels of variable length, and with a depth of sometimes 40 or 50 mètres. Between the channels are found the grounds known under the name of "crassats," which emerge at each tide. On these grounds, covered with parks and claires, are established the largest ostricultural works in existence.

The oyster industry has not been altogether created at Arcachon; it has been called into existence by the presence of natural banks, to the number of 19, scattered here and there in the basin. These beds, after having passed (like the oyster-beds of the Channel, and for the same reason) through a period of decay, which gave rise for a time to a fear that they would entirely disappear, have revived, and at the present time exhibit extraordinary fertility. The torrent of spat which escapes from them, mingling with the embryos which the oysters preserved in the parks furnish, is so considerable, that the mass of the waters in the basin remains impregnated with it from the month of June until the month of August; the collectors are covered with germs, and on well-placed tiles one may sometimes count 1,000 or 1,500. If all the progeny of each year attained to maturity, the Basin of Arcachon would soon be too small to contain so prolific a population.

Although these natural depôts are looked upon as centres of reproduction, and as such are husbanded and watched by the Administration of Marine, yet every year fishing is authorised there for some hours, to carry off the excess of production. In this short space of time great quantities of oysters are collected and delivered for sale, or spread in the parks. The oyster so produced, called also "native" or gravette oyster, is much in demand. It is distinguished by its marked form and light shell from the oyster of the channels, which is less pleasing to the eye, and of a thicker shell and less delicate flavour.

Arcachon possesses this advantage above all other ostricultural centres, namely, that the mollusc is from first to last reared there. There it is produced, grows, fattens, and passes directly into the hands of the retailer.

A description of the Arcachon basin would require considerable time and attention to render it complete. It would be difficult for me, in this summary report, to pass in review all the industrial works which have been established there. Their number is too considerable, and their description would go beyond what you intended, M. le Ministre; its monotony would be fatiguing, for in the greater number of concessions, belonging to the same group, the rules and processes in use in the station vary but little. To meet your wishes, I have endeavoured to study more attentively some establishments which seemed to me to present special interest, and which give an exact idea of ostriculture as it is carried on at Arcachon.

Establishment of the Ostricultural Union.

The works of the Ostricultural Association, at the head of which M. Venot is placed, are carried on in the Basin of Arcachon over an area of 42 hectares, comprising, on one hand, the concessions accorded under a title of management, by the Administration of Marine, to the Central Society for Aiding Shipwrecked Persons, and on the other, certain grounds situated close to the lighthouse and the parks of Les Jacquets.

Le Cès is the place of natural reproduction; it is an emergent ground of 11 hectares, covered with vegetation like a meadow. The soil, though tolerably firm, necessitates, however, the use of broad pattens, to prevent the treading-in or breaking of the shells when walked on. The oysters which it produces are called "native," or gravettes.

The fishing of this oyster-ground is done by squads of ten women placed in single file. Two leaders, placed at the ends of the row, direct the march. The women are separated a distance of one mètre from one another, and are provided with four satchels attached to their waists, in which they put the oysters as they pick them up. Followers detach their satchels when they are full, and empty them into baskets. The oysters, which lie just at the margin of the vegetation, are collected by means of a small rake.

When the fishing is over, beacons are placed on the square area where it has taken place, in order that, first, it may not be fished over a second time; and secondly, that later on cockle and oyster shells, the natural collectors which are employed to maintain continual fertility on the oyster-fields, may be spread over it.

The fishing on certain parts of these beds cannot go on for more than two hours or two hours and a half at each spring-tide; but as 40 or 50 persons are employed at this work, nearly 60,000 oysters a day can be collected.

When the sea has made the labourers retire, each woman goes with her burden to the ship "Le Travailleur," which is the centre of the works. The harvest of the day is turned out on long tables, and the women then proceed to detach and sort the oysters. They are so used to this work, and their eye is so practised, that they rarely employ the ring in order to classify the oysters according to size. This operation over, the oysters are sent off to the different parks—to Lahillon to grow, and to Crastorbe to fatten and prepare for travelling.

The parks at Lahillon are old oyster-grounds, from which the vegetation has been removed to convert them into claires for growing. On marine plants the growth is less rapid than on the bare soil; a square, however, of natural oyster-ground has been left, and such is the quality of the grounds at Lahillon that the gravette, or native, grows more quickly there than on the oyster-layings at Le Cès. The average size of this oyster at 15 months is from 2 to 4 centimètres.

The claires measure 45 mètres in length by 6 in breadth, and are 30 centimètres in depth. They are separated by little banks from 1 to 2 metres broad, formed of lumps of the clay found on the Island of Oiseaux, and supported by tiles placed on end.

One hundred thousand oysters can be parked in these claires. The specimens fed there are the little oysters gathered on the crassats, which require to grow before fattening, and the spat on tiles, which is only introduced after having remained in the packing-cases till the month of April, when the very dangerous tide of the March equinox is over.

The native oysters of which the growth has been arrested are placed in the reserve claires. In their new abode they return, after a little time, to a normal growth, and gain in six months from 2 to 4 centimètres.

As it is essential not to lose an inch of the precious working ground, the banks west of the crassat of Lahillon are utilised as free parks; but to facilitate the access to the higher claires, at every 20 mètres a space has been left where boats can moor.

Ile des Oiseaux (Parks of Crastorbe).

L' Ile des Oiseaux is the largest crassat in the basin, and the park-owners regard it as the most favourable ground for the cultivation of the oyster. The Ostricultural Society possess 11 hectares of claires there. The soil of these claires has been made before being used; it was originally composed of a bottom of mud several mètres thick, and of so thin a consistency that it could scarcely be walked on, even with large pattens.

The consolidation of the soil has been effected thus: A layer of shell-gravel, which is common in the Arcachon basin, was first laid down. On this layer, the thickness of which varies according to the greater or lesser fluidity of the mud, was spread another layer of pebbles, as large as nuts, from the quarries of Gazinet, near Bordeaux. These parks, being in the neighbourhood of strong currents, have had to be surrounded by palisades. They are served by a floodgate, which retains the water, for they emerge at every tide; but to avoid the injury which the rising tide might cause, the sluice is opened, when the sea has half filled the claire, by passing above its banks.

This part of the Ostricultural Society's concession is set apart for fattening, and for preparation for travelling.

The oysters are not transported here till they are 6 centimètres, or above that, in size; here they recover and become plump, but they only gain 2 centimètres in a year.

The oysters of Crastorbe are produced on the soil and on the tile. A certain number have been laid down at La Tremblade, but usually their first growth is effected at Lahillon. I will add that the bottoms of the parks at Crastorbe have remained in the state of natural oyster-grounds.

MM. Venot & Co. raise, at the same time, the native and tile oyster. Reproduction on collectors is obtained, especially at Lahillon, and in the parks of Les Jacquets. Tiles alone are employed, and are placed from the month of May to the month of June, according to the average temperature of the spring, which also regulates the emission of the spawn. They are taken up towards the month of November. The separating is done on board "Le Travailleur," and usually before the winter. The spat is immediately put in boxes, where it passes the cold season, and recovers from the wounds which separating may have caused. When transferred in the spring into the parks at Lahillon, it has become sufficiently strong to brave its enemies.

The Ostricultural Union has this year put down 110,000 tiles, and its parks contain nearly 30,000,000 young oysters. Sixty persons are continually occupied in this vast labour, and at times, when the work is heavy, this number is increased to 80 or 90. Experiments have been made by M. Venot on the American oysters. Of four barrels of spat sent from America, two arrived in good condition, and the surviving specimens quickly recovered the fatigue of their long voyage in the parks of Crastorbe. Their development was rapid, and one cannot do better than compare them with the Portugal oyster, which they resemble in many respects. The American oyster has been little approved of in this country, and its rearing has been abandoned.

As is the case with nearly all the principal oyster-cultivators, and especially with with M. de Montaugé, whose works are truly magnificent, the oysters which come from the parks of Venot & Co. are not immediately sent away. They are transported first to the basins annexed to the dispatching department, where they are allowed to cleanse; they are then washed and classified anew. The sorting is done by machines, which render this work easy; a single woman can sort from 20,000 to 30,000 in one day.

Among the principal park-owners of La Gironde, who, side by side with their purely commercial industry, make experiments with the view of perfecting the methods of oyster-culture, I shall cite MM. de Montaugé Frères, who have organised, on the road to La Teste, an experimental laboratory in their large establishment at Saint Joseph.

This laboratory, to which will be very shortly annexed a studio for research and observation, which will be provided with microscopes, consists of a basin of an area of 1,500 mètres square and 1 mètre deep, divided into two compartments, one of which is devoted to the preparation of oysters to be sent away, the other to experiments. The first compartment is lined with cement; the bed of the second has been remade, and a layer of clay beaten and dammed up, surmounted by another layer of muddy sand and shells, has been substituted for the original materials.

These works have been executed to prevent any introduction of water from the iron springs which rise in the concession of MM. de Montaugé, the metallic element of which is hurtful to the oyster. The basin is fed by means of a large floodgate opened at the rise of the tide, and closed when it recedes. This floodgate is placed at the head of a channel, the water from which is blended with fresh water at the mouth of a small stream. At first great care was taken lest this fresh water should mingle with the sea water during the refilling of the basin.

Amongst other experiments made by the MM. de Montaugé, they inquired into the aptitude which the captive oyster might have for producing spat capable of development. For three years the adult oysters parked in the reservoir of observation emitted no embryos, and even grew thin. The experimenters attributed this impoverishment to the too great saltness of the water which was so great that it deposited salt crystals on the marine plants contained in the basin. The want of success was evident; the experiments were abandoned, the oysters removed, and the piece of water converted into a fish-pond. From this moment care was no longer taken to prevent the mingling of the waters of the stream of which I have spoken with the sea water in the supply canal, and some time after, in raking the soil, a few oysters were found which had been overlooked. It was noticed that they had developed and grown stronger, and a more extraordinary and an unexpected fact was that traces of spat were found in the neighbourhood of the floodgate, and of the springs which rise here and there on the banks.

This wholly fortuitous discovery put MM. de Montaugé on the track of the truth. Some hundreds of oysters were again placed in the basin, and some collecting apparatus which was laid down became covered with spat.

It has been denied that these embryos came from the specimens experimented on, but from what source could they emanate? No park of reproduction is to be found in the neighbourhood; the tide, which might have served to convey them, must have traversed many kilomètres of crassats before entering the establishment; and this long passage across the emergent grounds, under the summer sun, so heats the sea water that the spat lose all their vitality in it. But, it has been also urged, how can these very waters, too warm to furnish the embryos with the normal conditions of existence, be fit to preserve the spawn of the captive oyster? We have an explanation of this apparently contradictory fact, if we remember that the fresh water of the stream, which we have already mentioned, was allowed to enter the canal of the establishment, and by its freshness to lower the temperature of the salt water.

Another experiment of MM. de Montaugé, with the aim of determining what influence the soil could have on the development of the mollusc, was to deposit in one part of their basin some earth taken from the parks at Oléron. Oysters of the same size and age were placed on this earth, and others were put by their side on ordinary soil. The result was that the growth of the specimens was almost equal, but the former were better nourished, and more horned.

All oyster-cultivators know that extreme cold and ice are prejudicial to oysters. The proprietors of the works at St. Joseph possess a basin containing 200,000 oysters. The basin having been frozen over, MM. de Montaugé immediately had the water renewed, and the reservoir covered with straw and hay. This plan succeeded, and only 100 specimens suffered from the frost.

I will not leave the establishment of St. Joseph without noting an interesting fact. In the parks which are most exposed to rough weather, and during the stormy season, the oysters are turned, and laid on their flat sides.

This ingenious arrangement renders the animal less accessible to the action of the cold, and gives the shell a firmer position, thus preventing it from being too easily lifted by the surf from the waves, and from being thrown to a distance by the violence of the sea.

MM. Grangeneuve & Co. also possess an establishment which deserves special mention. M. Grangeneuve has solved the difficult problem of raising the oyster in oyster-boxes from its birth, until it is fit for eating, whilst diminishing the great expense which the adoption of this method involves. His establishment is very fine, and no pains have been spared to render it one of the most complete at Arcachon. M. Grenier's station is also of the greatest interest. M. Grenier is one of the oldest park-owners of the basin, and he has more than once rendered services to the industry in which he has so long been engaged.

MM. Brown and Goubie have introduced into their parks cemented claires, which greatly diminish the expenses of maintenance necessitated by the ordinary claires. These claires are expensive to construct, but are very solid, and especially useful on grounds flooded by the sea.

M. Vidal, on the contrary, in the construction of his claires, uses neither tiles, boards, nor cement. He has managed to form with mud and potter's earth, beaten in and dammed up, embankments sufficiently firm to resist the waves. The facts are that the parks of which M. Vidal is the holder in the Ile des Oiseaux are very sheltered, and that the adaptation of his evidently economical plan would not be possible in the greater number of the concessions in the Arcachon basin.

M. Fillon has connected with his production-parks a building for various business purposes, very cleverly arranged, in which he has made numerous and interesting experiments. M. Fillon is, besides, one of the park-owners who carries on the oyster industry on a large scale.

I have still to mention MM. Surette and Gaston de Faramond, who are ceaselessly engaged in furthering the progress of ostriculture. Before summing-up with some simple statistics, I must remark that the products of Arcachon are not all such as are usually seen in our markets. Those tiny oysters which park-owners, impatient to sell, offer to dispose of as soon as they measure the regulation size of five centimetres, are only trash, or immature specimens.

There are in the Arcachon basin 3,317 parks, held by 3,934 persons, and occupying an area of 3,836 hectares.

The exportation amounted, during the season of 1873-74, to 42,542,650 oysters of 5 centimètres; during that of 1874-75, to 112,705,233 oysters of the same size; during that of 1875-76, to 196,885,450. The value of the oysters sold in 1875-76 was 3,941,309 francs.

I have now reached the end of my task. I have doubtless omitted to mention many establishments worthy of interest, and some localities where, as at Tréguier and Paimpol, the ostricultural industry prospers, without, however, presenting to the observer any new facts for study, or suggestions worth ventilation. I will not dwell on this further. But I am unwilling to close without speaking of the fruitful idea which the Department of Marine, which is always aiding progress, has this year realised. It relates to the conversion of salt-marshes into rearing claires. If the efforts, Monsieur le Ministre, which your Administration has so happily undertaken at Croisic have an ultimately favourable issue—and the success of the first season makes me sanguine—a new and brilliant future is in store for ostriculture.

The conversion of salt-marshes into oyster establishments will finally insure large outlets for that overflowing excess of production which every year is a cause of embarrassment to the oyster-cultivators of Arcachon and Brittany.

This

This will be one benefit, in addition to the many which our people in the West will owe to the Marine, which has already done so much for them; and France, generally, will be the gainer by a movement which will, through a new process of industry, restore to the deserted salt-marshes their former wealth and prosperity.

Permit me, M. le Ministre, before closing this report, to present my grateful thanks to the Commissaires and Agents of the Marine with whom I have been in communication. I owe them this public acknowledgment, having always found in them the most perfect readiness to facilitate my labours, combined with that courtesy for which the Marine has always been distinguished.

Accept, Monsieur le Ministre, &c.

Bouchon-Brandely,
Secretary of the College of France.

General Note.—The Number of Hours given in the last column does not in numerous instances, as appears by the Returns received at the National Debt Office, show to anything like the full extent, the time occupied in transacting the whole business of the Banks; the attention of the Officers and Clerks being much occupied with Correspondence, attendance on Trustees and Managers at their meetings, half-yearly Balances of Accounts, preparation of Returns to the Commissioners and to Parliament, and various incidental matters in addition to the ordinary business arising from receipt and payment of money

LIST of all such SAVINGS BANKS as, under the provisions of the Act 26 Vict. c. 14, or otherwise, have been CLOSED and have TRANSFERRED their FUNDS, or any part thereof, to the POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS; showing, in each Case, the Number of such Banks, as well as the Number and Amount of Depositors' Accounts so Transferred, and the Amount of Compensation, if any, made to all or any of the Officers of such Banks respectively; and showing also the Years in which such Banks were respectively Opened and Closed, and the Number and Amount of their Depositors' Balances, and the Number of Days and Hours in each Week on which the same Banks were Opened for Public Business, at the close of the Year ending on the 20th November next preceding the Date of such Closing; distinguishing the same, as in the form of the Return, for each separate County, as well as collectively, for England and Wales, Scotland and Ireland, and for the United Kingdom.

ORDERS FOR FISHERY GRANTS.

1877.

REPORT by the BOARD of TRADE of their PROCEEDINGS under Part III. of "The SEA FISHERIES ACT, 1868."

IN pursuance of Section 50 of "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868," the Board of Trade make the following Report respecting the applications to, and the proceedings of, the Board under Part III. of that Act during the past year.

On the 26th June 1876, the date of the last Report of the Board of Trade under "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868," the following applications under that Act were under consideration, namely—two in Falmouth Harbour, viz.:—

(a.) From Mr. Jonathan Russell, of St. Mary Axe, London, and Mr. John Norman Keighley, of 7, Ironmonger-lane, London, for a grant of a several oyster and mussel fishery in part of Falmouth Harbour, and of the estuary of the River Fal, in the County of Cornwall.

(b.) From the Corporation of Falmouth for a grant of an Order for the regulation of an oyster and mussel fishery within limits almost identical with those in respect of which Messrs. Russell and Keighley had made the application above mentioned; and one at Shelford Creek, in the County of Essex.

1. FALMOUTH.

It was stated in the last Report that an inspection had been ordered in the case of application (a); that the Inspector, after formally opening the inquiry, had adjourned it; and that the inquiry into both the applications could be held at the same time, when the preliminary advertisements in the case of application (b), had been duly published.

In the case of application (a), the promoters ultimately withdrew their application.

In the case of application (b), the Board of Trade, after consideration of the report of their Inspector, and of the objections made to them against the application, decided to make an Order in favour of the Corporation of Falmouth, and "The Falmouth Fishery Order, 1877," as made by the Board, is now before Parliament for confirmation.

2. SHELFORD CREEK.

It was stated in the last Report that the Board of Trade had directed an inspection to be held in the matter of the application.

After consideration of the report of their Inspector, and of the objections made to them against this application, the Board of Trade declined to proceed with it.

3. Blackwater (Essex).

Four applications have been received for grants of several oyster and mussel fishery over portions of the River Blackwater, viz. :—

(a.) From the Bradwell River Oyster Fishery Company (Limited).

(b.) From the Blackwater River Oyster Fishery Company (Limited).

(c.) From the Tollesbury and Mersea (Blackwater) Oyster Fishery Company (Limited).

(d.) From the St. Peter's (Blackwater) Oyster Fishery Company (Limited).

Draft Orders have been prepared and circulated, and an inspection has been ordered. The inquiry into the four applications will be held at the same time.

4. Isle of Sheppey.

Mr. Jean François Nicolas Briesman Simons, of Great Tower-street, London, has applied for the grant of a several oyster and mussel fishery on the north side of the Isle of Sheppey, in the county of Kent.

A Draft Order has been prepared and circulated, and an inspection has been ordered.

In the last Report it was stated that the Board of Trade had been considering the question of directing, under the 45th section of the Act, inquiries to ascertain whether fisheries already established under orders were properly cultivated, but that they had postponed further consideration of this question until the Select Committee of the House of Commons, then inquiring into the reasons for the present scarcity of oysters, &c., had presented their Report. After the Committee had presented their Report, the Board of Trade, acting in accordance with the recommendations therein contained, directed in the autumn of 1876 a series of inspections. The Reports of the inspectors will be found in Parliamentary Paper, No. 1, of Session 1877.

The Board of Trade have, in pursuance of the powers conferred on them by the 45th section of "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868," determined and revoked the grants made by the following Fishery Orders:

"The Menai Straits Fishery Order, 1874,"
"The Salcombe River Fishery Order, 1872,"
"The Hamble Oyster Fishery Order, 1868,"
"The Edinburgh Fishery Order, 1870,"
"The Mid Forth Fishery Order, 1870,"
"The Donibristle Fishery Order, 1869,"
"The Holy Loch Fishery Order, 1869:"

as they were not satisfied that the respective grantees were properly cultivating the ground within the limits of these fisheries.

No alteration in the printed Regulations issued by this Board has been made since their last Report.

Board of Trade,
7 July, 1877.
